CONTINUATION

OF THE COMPLETE.

HISTORY

OF ENGLAND.

By T. SMOLLETT, M.D.

VOLUME THE FOURTH.

Non tamen pigebit vel incondita ac rudi voce memoriam prioris servitusis, ac testimonium præsentium bonorum composuisse.

Tacit. Agricola.

LONDON:

Printed for RICHARD BALDWIN, at the Rose in Paternoster-row.

MDCCLXI.

MOITAUMITMOD

SPECTRO THE TO

HISTORY

30

C. V.

MVSEVM BRITAN NICVM

T THE

VOLUME THE FOURT

Fourtamen pleakt vel incondita de rudt vere menteriam prioriefen leskie, ac tellimenium preferrium benezum compoluis. Tecony Arthrolia

LONDON:

Printed for Branch will stowers at the Rose in Paternostic source

CONTINUATION

-1 toppodensin OF THE

to soil don't no spaid knutttoo a make of

GEORGE II.

HE conquest of Canada being atchieved, nothing now remained to be done in North America, except the demolition of the fortifications of Louisbourg on the island of Cape Breton; for which purpose, some able engineers had been fent from England with the ships commanded by captain Byron. By means of mines artfully difposed and well constructed, the fortifications were reduced to a heap of rubbish; the glacis was levelled, and the ditches were filled. All the artillery, ammunition, and implements of war, were conveyed to Halifax: but the barracks were repaired fo as to accommodate three hundred men occasionally; and the hospital, with the private houses, were left standing.

An. 1760. Demolition of Louisbourg.

The by which the enemits, Aous practices, is utterly fub-

An. 1760. Clandestine trade with the French.

The French still possessed upon the continent of America, the fertile country lying on each side of the great river Mississippi, which disembogues itself into the Gulph of Florida; but the colony was so thinly peopled and so ill provided, that far from being formidable, it scarce could have substited, unless the British traders had been base and treacherous enough to supply it from time to time with provisions and necessaries. The same infamous commerce was carried on with divers French plantations in the West-Indies; insomuch that the governors of provinces, and commanders of the squadrons stationed in those seas, made formal complaints of it to the ministry. The temptation

Copy of a Letter from Mr. Secretary Pitt, to the several Governors and Councils in North - America, relating to the Flag of Truce Trade.

Whitehall, 23 Aug. 1760.

GENTLEMEN,

The commanders of his majesty's forces and sleets in North-America and the West-Indies, have transmitted certain and repeated intelligences, of an illegal and most pernicious trade carried on by the king's subjects in North-America and the West-Indies, as well to the French islands as to the French islands as to the French set-tlements on the continent in America, and particularly to the rivers Mobile and Mississippi; by which the enemies, to the great reproach and detriment of government, are supplied with provisions and other necessaries; whereby they are principally, if not alone, enabled to fustain and protract this long and expenfive war. And it further appearing, that large fums of bullion are fent by the king's subjects to the above places, in return whereof commodities are taken, which interfere with the product of the British colonies themselves, in open contempt of the authority of the mother-country, as well as the most manifest prejudice of the manufactures and trade of Great Britain. In order, therefore, to put the most speedy and effectual stop to such flagitious practices, fo utterly fub-

verfive

tion of extraordinary profit excited the merchants, An. 176c] not only to affift the enemies of their country, but also to run all risques in eluding the vigilance of the legislature. The inhabitants of Martinique found a plentiful market of provision furnished by the British subjects at the Dutch islands of Eustatia and Curaçoa; and those that were fettled on the island of Hispaniola were supplied in the same manner, at the Spanish settlement of Monte-Christo.

While the British commanders exerted themselves Insurrecby sea and land, with the most laudable spirit of tion of vigilance and courage, against the foreign adversaries of their country; the colonists of Jamaica ran the most imminent hazard of being extirpated by a domestic enemy. The negro-flaves of that island, the negroes in Jamaica.

verfive of all laws, and fo highly repugnant to the wellbeing of this kingdom:

It is his majesty's express will and pleasure, that you do forthwith make the strictest and most diligent enquiry into the state of this dangerous and ignominious trade: and that you do use every means in your power to detect and discover persons concerned either as principals or acceffaries therein; and that you do take every step authorized by law, to bring all fuch heinous offenders to the most exemplary and condign punishment. And you will as foon as may be, and from time to time, transmit to me, for the king's information, full and particular accounts of the progress you shall have made in the execution of this his majefty's commands; to the which the king expects that you pay the most exact obedience. And you are further to use your utmost endeavours to trace out and investigate the various artifices and evalions by which the dealers in this iniquitous intercourse find means to cover their criminal proceedings, and to elude the law; in order that from fuch lights due and timely confiderations may be had, what farther provision may be necessary to restrain an evil of fuch extensive and pernicious consequences.

I am, &c.

An. 1760. grown insolent in the contemplation of their own formidable numbers, or by observing the supine indolence of their mafters, or stimulated by that appetite for liberty fo natural to the mind of man. began, in the course of this year, to entertain thoughts of shaking off the yoke by means of a general infurrection. Affemblies were held, and plans revolved for this purpose. At length they concerted a scheme for rising in arms all at once in different parts of the island, in order to massacre all the white men, and take possession of the government. They agreed that this defign should be put in execution immediately after the departure of the fleet for Europe: but their plan was defeated by their ignorance and impatience. Those of the conspirators that belonged to captain Forrest's estate, being impelled by the fumes of intoxication, fell fuddenly upon the overfeer while he fat at supper with some friends, and butchered the whole company. Being immediately joined by some of their confederates, they attacked the neighbouring plantations, where they repeated the fame barbarities, and feizing all the arms and ammunition that fell in their way, began to grow formidable to the colony. The governor no sooner received intimation of this disturbance, than he, by proclamation, subjected the colonists to martial law. All other bufiness was interrupted, and every man took to his arms. The regular troops, joined by the troop of militia and a confiderable number of volunteers, marched from Spanish Town to St. Mary's, where the infurrection began, and skirmished with the insurgents: but as they declined standing any regular engagement, ment, and trusted chiefly to bush-fighting, the An. 1760. governor employed against them the free blacks, commonly known by the name of the Wild Negroes, now peaceably fettled under the protection of the government. These auxiliaries, in consideration of a price fet upon the heads of the rebels. attacked them in their own way, flew them by furprize, until their strength was broken, and numbers made away with themselves in despair; so that the infurrection was supposed to be quelled about the beginning of May: but in June it broke out again with redoubled fury, and the rebels were reinforced to a very confiderable number. The regular troops and the militia, joined by a body of failors, formed a camp under the command of colonel Spragge, who fent out detachments against the negroes, a good number of whom were killed and some taken; but the rest, instead of submitting, took shelter in the woods and mountains. The prisoners being tried, and found guilty of rebellion, were put to death by a variety of tor-Some were hanged; fome beheaded; fome burned; and fome fixed alive upon gibbets. One of these last lived eight days and eighteen hours, fuspended under a vertical fun, without being refreshed by one drop of water, or receiving any manner of fustenance.

In order to prevent such insurrections for the future, the justices assembled at the sessions of the tions in peace, established regulations importing, that no that negro-flave should be allowed to quit his plantation without a white conductor, or a ticket of leave; that every negro playing at any fort of game should be scourged through the public ftreets;

Regulaisland.

An. 176c. streets; that every publican suffering such gaming in his house should forfeit forty shillings; that every proprietor fuffering his negroes to beat a drum, blow a horn, or make any other noise in his plantation, should be fined in ten pounds; and every overfeer allowing these irregularities, should pay half that fum, to be demanded, or diffrained for, by any civil or military officer; that every free negro, or mulatto, should wear a blue cross on his right shoulder, on pain of imprisonment; that no mulatto, Indian, or negro, should hawk or fell any thing, except fresh fish and milk, on pain of being seourged; that rum and punch houses should be shut up during divine service on Sundays, under the penalty of twenty shillings; and that those who had petit licences should shut up their houses on other nights at nine o'clock. Notwithstanding these examples and regulations, a body of rebellious negroes still subsisted in places that were deemed inaccessible to regular forces, and from these they made nocturnal irruptions into the nearest plantations, where they acted with all the wantonness of barbarity; so that the people of Jamaica were obliged to conduct themselves with the utmost vigilance and circumspection; while rear admiral Holmes, who commanded at fea. took every precaution to fecure the island from infult or invasion.

Action at fea off Hifpaniola.

He not only took measures for the defence of Iamaica, but also contrived and executed schemes for annoying the enemy. Having, in the month of October, received intelligence that five French frigates were equipped at Cape Francois on the island of Hispaniola, in order to convoy a fleet of merchant.

merchant-ships to Europe, he stationed the ships An. 1766: under his command, in fuch a manner as was most likely to intercept this fleet; and his disposition was attended with fuccess. The enemy failed from the cape to the number of eight fail on the fixteenth. and next day they were chaced by the king's fhips, the Hampshire, Lively, and Boreas, which, however, made little progress, as there was little wind, and that variable. In the evening, the breeze freshened, and about midnight the Boreas came up with the Sirenne, commanded by commodore Mac-Cartie. They engaged with great vivacity for about twenty-five minutes, when the Sirenne shot a-head, and made the best of her way. The Boreas was fo damaged in the rigging, that she could not close with the enemy again till next day at two in the afternoon, when the action was renewed off the east end of Cuba, and maintained till forty minutes past four, when Mr. Mac-Cartie struck. In the mean time, the Hampshire and Lively gave chace to the other four French frigates, which fleered to the fouthward with all the fail they could carry, in order to reach the west-end of Tortuga, and shelter themselves in Port au Prince. On the eighteenth the Lively, by the help of her oars, came up with the Valeur at half an hour past seven in the morning; and after a hot action that continued an hour and a half, compelled the enemy to fubmit. The Hampshire stood after the other three, and, about four in the afternoon, ran up between the duke de Choiseuil and the prince Ed-These he engaged at the same time; but the first, having the advantage of the wind, made her retreat into Port au Paix: the other ran a-shore about two leagues to leeward, and struck her colours:

An. 1760. lours; but, at the approach of the Hampshire, the enemy fet her on fire, and she blew up. This was also the fate of the Fleur de Lis, which had run into Fresh-water-bay, a little farther to leeward of Port au Prince. Thus by the prudent disposition of admiral Holmes, and the gallantry of his three captains, Norbury, Uvedale, and Maitland, two large frigates of the enemy were taken, and three destroyed.

Exploit of two lieutenants in the navy.

The spirit of the officers was happily supported by an uncommon exertion of courage in the men, who chearfully engaged in the most dangerous enterprizes. Immediately after the capture of the French frigates, eight of the enemy's privateers were destroyed or brought into Jamaica. these, namely the Vainqueur of ten guns, fixteen fwivels, and ninety men, and the Mackau of fix fwivels and fifteen men, had run into shoal-water in Cumberland harbour, on the island of Cuba. The boats of the Trent and Boreas were manned, under the direction of the lieutenants, Millar and Stuart, who being rowed up to the Vainqueur, boarded and took possession under a close fire, after having furmounted many other difficulties. Mackau was taken, without any relistance; then the boats proceeded against the Guespe of eight guns and eighty-five men, which lay at anchor farther up in the Lagoon; but before they came up, the enemy had fet her on fire, and she was destroyed.

Gallant behaviour of the captains Obrien and Tayler in the Leeward Mands.

The same activity and resolution distinguished the captains and officers belonging to the fquadron commanded by Sir James Douglas off the Leeward Islands. In the month of September, the captains Obrien and Taylor, of the ships Temple and Griffin, being on a joint cruise off the islands

Granadas, received intelligence that the Virgin, An. 1760. formerly a British sloop of war, which had been taken by the enemy, then lay at anchor, together with three privateers, under protection of three forts on the island, failed thither in order to attack them; and their enterprize was crowned with fuccess. After a warm engagement, that lasted several hours, the enemy's batteries were filenced, and indeed demolished, and the English captains took possession of the four prizes. They afterwards entered another harbour of that island, having first demolished another fort; and there they lay four days unmolested, at the expiration of which they carried off three other prizes. In their return to Antigua, they fell in with thirteen ships bound to Martinique with provisions, and took them all without refistance. About the same time, eight or nine privateers were taken by the ships which commodore Sir James Douglas employed in cruifing round the island of Guadaloupe; so that the British commerce in those seas flourished under his care and protection.

In the East Indies, the British arms still continued to prosper. After the reduction of Arcot, the garrisons of Permacoil and Allumparva furren- Indies. dered themselves prisoners of war in the beginning of May. The Falmouth obliged the Haarlem, a French ship from Merguy, to run ashore to the northward of Pondicherry. The important fettlement of Carical was reduced by the fea and land forces commanded by rear-admiral Cornish and major Monfon, and the French garrison made prisoners of war; and colonel Coote formed the blockade of Pondicherry by land, while the harbour was befet by the English squadron.

Tranfactions in the EastLittle atchievements in the bay of Quiberon.

An 1760. No action of importance was in the course of this year atchieved by the naval force of Great Britain in the leas of Europe. A powerful squadron still remained in the bay of Quiberon, in order to amuse and employ a body of French forces on that part of the coast, and interrupt the navigation of the enemy; though the principal aim of this armament feems to have been to watch and detain the few French ships, which had run into the river Villaine, after the defeat of Conflans; an object the importance of which will doubtless aftonish posterity. The fleet employed on this fervice was alternately commanded by admiral Boscawen and Sir Edward Hawke, officers of diffinguished abilities, whose talents might have been furely rendered subservient to much greater national advantages. All that Mr. Boscawen could do in this circumscribed scene of action was to take possession of a small island near the river Vannes, which he caused to be cultivated and planted with vegetables for the use of the men infected with fcorbutic disorders arising from falt provision, sea air, and want of proper exercise. In the month of September, Sir Edward Hawke, who had by this time relieved Mr. Boscawen, detached the gallant lord Howe in the Magnanime, with the ships prince Frederick and Bedford, to reduce the little island of Dumet, about three miles in length and two in breadth, abounding with fresh water. It was defended by a small fort mounted with nine cannon, and manned with one company of the regiment of Bourbon, who furrendered in a very fhort time after the ships had begun the attack. By this small conquest a considerable expence was faved faved to the nation in the article of transports em- An. 1760. ployed to carry water for the use of the squadron.

Admiral Rodney still maintained his former sta- Admiral tion off the coast of Havre de Grace, to observe Rodney what should pass at the mouth of the Seine. In destroys the month of July, while he hovered in this neigh- fels on bourhood, five large flat bottomed boats loaded the coaft with cannon and shot, set sail from Harsleur in the of France. middle of the day, with their colours flying, as if they had fet the English squadron at defiance; for the walls of Havre de Grace, and even the adjacent hills were covered with spectators, assembled to behold the iffue of this adventure. Having reached the river of Caen, they stood backwards and forwards upon the shoals, intending to amuse Mr. Rodney till night, and then proceed under cover of the darkness. He perceived their drift, and gave directions to his small vessels to be ready. that as foon as day-light failed, they should make all the fail they could for the mouth of the river Orne, in order to cut off the enemy's retreat, while he himself stood with the larger ships to the fleep coast of Port Bassin. The scheme succeeded to his wish. The enemy, seeing their retreat cut off, ran ashore at Port Bassin, where the admiral destroyed them, together with the small fort which had been erected for the defence of this harbour. Each of those vessels was one hundred feet in length, capable of containing four hundred men for a short passage. What their destination was, we cannot pretend to determine: but the French had provided a great number of these transports; for ten escaped into the river Orne leading to Caen; and in consequence of this disafter one hundred

An. 1760. were unloaded, and fent up again to Rouen. This was not all the damage that the enemy fustained on this part of the coaft. In the month of November, captain Ourry of the Acteon chaced a large privateer, and drove her on shore between Cape Barfleur and La Hogue, where she perished. The cutters belonging to Mr. Rodney's fquadron fcoured the coast towards Dieppe, where a considerable fishery was carried on, and where they took or destroyed near forty vessels of considerable burthen. Though the English navy suffered nothing from the French during this period, it sustained fome damage from the weather. The Conqueror, a new ship of the line, was lost in the channel on the island of St. Nicholas; but the crew and cannon were faved. The Lyme of twenty-guns foundered in the Cattegate in Norway, and fifty of the men perished; and, in the West Indies, a tender belonging to the Dublin, commanded by commodore Sir James Douglas, was loft in a gale of wind, with an hundred chosen mariners.

Preparations for a fecret expedition.

Of the domestic transactions relating to the war, the most considerable was the equipment of a powerful armament destined for some secret expedi-A numerous body of forces was affembled, and a great number of transports collected at Portsmouth. Generals-were nominated to the command of this enterprize. The troops were actually embarked with a great train of artillery; and the eyes of the whole nation were attentively fixed upon this armament, which could not have been prepared without incurring a prodigious expence. Notwithstanding these preparations, the whole fummer was spent in idleness and inaction; and in the

the latter end of the season the undertaking was An. 1760. laid aside. The people did not fail to clamour against the inactivity of the summer, and complain, that notwithstanding the immense subsidies granted for the profecution of the war, no stroke of importance was struck in Europe for the advantage of Great Britain; but that her treasure was lavished upon fruitless parade, or a G-n alliance ftill more pernicious. It must be owned, indeed, that no new attempt was made to annoy the enemy on British principles; for the surrender of Montreal was the natural consequence of the steps which had been taken and of the measures concerted in the course of the preceding year. It will be allowed, we apprehend, that the expence incurred by the armament at Portsmouth, and the body of troops there detained would have been sufficient, if properly applied, to reduce the island of Mauritius on the coast of Africa, Martinique in the West-Indies, or Minorca in the Mediterranean, and all these three were objects of importance. But, in all probability, the defign of the armament was either to intimidate the French into proposals of peace, to make a diversion from the Rhine by alarming the coast of Bretagne, or to throw over a body of troops into Flanders to effect a junction with the hereditary prince of Brunswic, who at the head of twenty thousand men had made an irruption as far as the Lower Rhine, and even croffed that river; but he miscarried in the execution of his defign.

In the midst of these alarms, some regard was Astronopayed to the improvements of natural knowledge: The Royal Society having made application to the mers fent to the East-Indies.

An. 1760.

king, representing that there would be a transit of Venus over the disk of the sun, on the fixth day of June, and that there was reason to hope the parallax of that planet might be more accurately determined, by making proper observations of this phæ nomenon, at the island of St. Helena, near the coast of Africa, and at Bencoolen in the East-Indies; his majesty granted a sum of money to defray the expence of fending able aftronomers to these two places, and ordered a ship of war to be equipped for their conveyance. Accordingly Mr. Nevil Maskelyne and Mr. Robert Waddington were appointed to make the observations at St. Helena; and Mr. Charles Mason and Mr. Jeremiah Dixon undertook the voyage to Bencoolen on the island of Sumatra *.

Remarkable ftory of mifs Bell.

Saft-fire

The incredible drains occasioned by the war, produced fo little effect in lowering the spirits of the people and diminishing the appearance of national wealth, that scarce any thing was seen but uninterrupted scenes of gaiety and diversion through the whole kingdom. Nay, luxury feemed to advance with more gigantic strides, and every part of the metropolis refounded with mirth and minstrelly, riot and extravagance. In the month of October, the attention of the public was engaged by some interesting circumstances that attended the death of one Miss Bell, an unfortunate young creature of a good family, who had renounced her father's house.

April, the king granted to his grandson prince Edward male of his royal highness, York and Albany, and of

In the beginning of kingdom of Great Britain, and of earl of the kingdom of Ireland, by the names, Augustus, and to the heirs files, and titles of duke of the dignities of duke of the earl of Ulfter.

and embraced the wretched life of a common pro- An. 1760; flitute. She died at a lodging house in Marybone. having declared, on her death-bed, to an officer of her acquaintance, who visited her from a motive of humanity, that she had received her death's wounds at a bagnio, from a certain young gentleman, who feemed to have mangled her out of meer wantonness of brutality. She not only perfifted in repeating this declaration before divers persons; but conjured the officer to see justice done upon the villain, who had treated her fo inhumanly. Her complaint was corroborated by the affeveration of her own maid and attendant, who bore witness to her being wounded in two different places. These circumstances made fuch an impression upon the gentleman, that he applied to a justice of the peace, and obtained an order for taking up her body after she was buried. that it might be subjected to the cognizance of the coroner and his inquest; it accordingly underwent an examination, and was re-interred, after the jury had given their verdict, that she died of a natural The officer, who, though in attendance. had not been examined, was not fatisfied with this decision, and resolved to promote a further enquiry: he wrote to the young woman's father. as well as to the person accused, who had retired to the country, and declared, that he would fubmit himself to a fair trial, that his character might be vindicated to the fatisfaction of the public; accordingly, when the father commenced a profecution, he furrendered himself before five justices of the peace in Westminster, who, having examined a great number of witnesses, were of Numb. 31. opinion,

An. 1760. Opinion, that the warrant should be discharged.
As a pamphlet, containing an account of the death of miss Bell, had been published, and without doubt given a bad impression of this gentleman, he prosecuted the officer in the King's Bench for having published a libel against him; but the information was set aside, and the judge ordered the prosecutor to be tried at the Old Baily for murder. He was brought to the bar of that tribunal, in the month of February, and, after a long hearing, acquitted. By part of the evidence it appeared. there was reason to believe the unfortunate deceased was actually delirious, when she made the complaint to the officer: the nurse contradicted the evidence of that gentleman: the fervants of the bagnio declared, that no wounds had been given at the time when the tragedy was supposed to be acted: the apothecary, who attended her in her last moments, affirmed that the wounds could not be the cause of her death, but actually preserved her from dying of a mortification; and the phyfician gave it as his opinion, that the supposed wounds were no other than abscesses, formed by an effort of nature to relieve itself. Had they really been wounds, there would be little reason to suppose they were the immediate cause of her death, as no confiderable vessel had been hurt. nor any of the bowels injured; but, that the infliction of fuch wounds, co-operating with other circumstances of barbarity, blows, stripes, and bruifes, might, in a body incenfed with rage. and inflamed with intoxication, produce a fever. that would terminate in death, is a possibility to which every judicious phyfician must subscribe; and.

1701.

and, in that case, he, who inflicted the wounds and An. 1760. bruifes, who aroused the refentment, and promoted the intoxication, of the deceased, cannot justly be pronounced innocent of her death. The person. however, accused of miss Bell's murder was acquitted on the fullest evidence.

Except the countries that were actually the Earthfcenes of war, no political revolution or diffurbance disquieted the general tranquillity. Syria, indeed, felt all the horrors and wreck of a dreadful earthquake, protracted in repeated shocks, which began on the thirtieth day of October, in the neighbourhood of Tripoli. A great number of houses were overthrown at Seyde, and many people buried under the ruins. It was felt through a space of ten thousand square leagues, comprehending the mountains of Libanus, and Antilibanus, with an infinite number of villages, that were reduced to heaps of rubbish. At Acra, or Ptolemais, the fea overflowed its banks, and poured into the streets; though eight feet above the level of the water. The city of Saphet was intirely destroyed, and the greatest part of its inhabitants perished. At Damascus all the minorets. were overthrown, and fix thousand people lost The shocks diminished gradually their lives. till the twenty-fifth day of November, when they were renewed with redoubled havock; the earth trembled with the most dreadful convulsions, and the greater part of Tripoli was destroyed. Balbec was entirely ruined, and this was the fate of many other towns and castles; so that the people, who escaped the ruins, were obliged to sojourn in the open fields, and all Syria was threatened with the B 2 vengeance

quakes in

An. 1760.

vengeance of heaven. Such a dangerous ferment arose at Constantinope, that a revolution was apprehended. Mustapha, the present emperor, had no fons; but, his brother Bajazet, whose life he had spared, contrary to the maxims of Turkish policy, produced a fon by one of the women, with whom he was indulged in his confinement; a circumstance which aroused the jealousy of the emperor to fuch a degree, that he refolved to difpatch his brother. The great officers of the Porte opposed this design, which was so disagreeable to the people, that an infurrection enfued. Several Turks and Armenians, taking it for granted that a revolution was at hand, bought up great quantities of grain; and a dreadful dearth was the consequence of this monopoly. The Sultan asfembled the troops, quieted the infurgents, ordered the engroffers of corn to be executed, and in a little time, the repose of the city was reestablished.

Wife conduct of the Catholic king. Notwithstanding the prospect of a rupture in Italy, no new incident interrupted the tranquillity which the southern parts of Europe enjoyed. The king of Spain, howsoever sollicited by the other branch of the house of Bourbon, to engage in the war, as its ally, refused to interpose in any other way, than as a mediator between the courts of London and Versailles. He sent the Conde de Fuentes, a nobleman of high rank and character, in quality of ambassador extraordinary to the king of Great Britain, in order to offer his good offices for effecting a peace; and the conde, after having conferred with the English ministry, made an excursion to Paris; but his proposal with respect to a ceffation of hostilities, if in reality such a pro- An. 1760. posal was ever made, did not meet with a cordial reception. Other differences subsisting between the crowns of Great Britain and Spain, he found no difficulty in compromising. His Catholic majesty persisted in the execution of a plan truly worthy of a patriot king. In the first place, he fpared no pains and application to make himfelf thoroughly acquainted with the state of his kingdom. He remitted to his people all they owed the crown, amounting to threescore millions of reals: he demanded an exact account of his father's debts. that they might be discharged with the utmost punctuality: an order was fent to the treasury, that ten millions of reals should be annually appropriated for this purpose, until the whole should be liquidated; and, to the first year's payment, he added fifty millions, to be divided equally among the legal claimants. He took measures for the vigorous execution of the laws against offenders; encouraged industry; protected commerce; and felt the exquifite pleafure of being beloved as the father of his people. To give importance to his crown, and extend his influence among the powers of Europe, he equipped a powerful squadron of ships at Carthagena, and is faid to have declared his intention to employ them against Algiers. should the Dey refuse to release the slaves of the Spanish nation.

Portugal feemed still agitated from the shock of Affairs of the late conspiracy, which was quelled in that Portugal kingdom. The pope's nuncio was not only forbid the court, but even fent under a strong guard to the frontiers: an indignity which induced the

An. 1760. pontiff to order the Portuguese minister at Rome to evacuate the ecclefiastical dominions. In the mean time, another embarkation of Jesuits was fent from Lisbon to Civita Vecchia; yet the expulsion of these fathers did not restore the internal peace of Portugal, or put an end to the practice of plotting: for, even fince their departure, some persons of rank have been either committed to close prison, or exiled from the kingdom. The Iesuits were not more fortunate in America; for in the month of October, in the foregoing year, an obstinate battle was fought between the united forces of Spain and Portugal, and the Indians of Paraguay, who were under the dominion of the Jesuits: victory at length declared in favour of the two crowns: fo that the vanquished were obliged to capitulate, and lay down their arms. As the court of Portugal had made remonstrances to the British ministry against the proceedings of the English squadron under admiral Boscawen, which had attacked and destroyed some French ships under the Portuguese fort in the bay of Lagos, his Britannic majesty thought proper to fend the Earl of Kinnoul, as ambaffador extraordinary, to Lisbon, where that nobleman made fuch excuses for the insult of the English admiral, as entirely removed all mifunderstanding between the two crowns; and could not fail of being agreeable to the Portuguese monarch, thus respected, soothed, and deprecated by a mighty nation in the very zenith of power and prosperity. On the fixth of June, being the birth day of the king of Portugal, the marriage of his brother, Don' Pedro, with the princess of Brazil, was celebrated in the chapel of the palace where the king re- An. 1760. fides, to the universal joy of the people, as this match will prevent all disputes with respect to the succession. The nuptials were announced to the public by the discharge of cannon, and celebrated with illuminations, and all kinds of rejoicing.

An incident, which happened in the Mediterra- ATurkish nean, had like to have drawn the indignation of ship of the the Ottoman Porte on the knights of the order of ried into Malta. A large Turkish ship of the line, mount- Malta. ed with fixty eight brass cannon, having on board a complement of feven hundred men, besides feventy Christian slaves, under the immediate command of the Turkish admiral, had, in company with two frigates, five gallies, and other smaller vessels, failed in June from the Dardanells. cruifed along the coasts of Smyrna, Scio, and Trio, and at length anchored in the channel of Stangie, where the admiral with four hundred persons went on shore, on the nineteenth day of September: the Christian slaves, seizing this opportunity, armed themselves with knives, and fell upon the three hundred that remained with fuch fury and effect, that a great number of the Turks were inftantly flain: many leaped overboard into the sea, where they perished; and the rest sued for mercy. The Christians, having thus secured possession of the ship, hoisted fail, and bore away for Malta; which, though chared by the two frigates, and a Ragusan ship, they reached by crouding all their canvas; and brought their prize fafe into the harbour of Valette, amidst the acclamations of the people. The order of Malta,

An. 1760.

as a recompence for this fignal act of bravery and resolution, assigned to the captors the whole property of the ship and slaves, together with all the effects on board, including a sum of money, which the Turkish commander had collected by contribution, amounting to a million and an half of slorins. The Grand Signor was so enraged at this event, that he disgraced his admiral, and threatened to take vengeance on the order of Malta, for having detained the ship, and countenanced the capture.

Patriot Schemes of the king of Denmark.

With respect to the disputes which had so long embroiled the Northern parts of Europe, the neutral powers feemed as averse as ever to a participation. The king of Denmark continued to perfect those plans, which he had wifely formed for increasing the wealth, and promoting the happiness of his subjects; nor did he neglect any opportunity of improving natural knowledge, for the benefit of mankind in general. He employed men of ability, at his own expence, to travel into foreign countries, and collect the most curious productions for the advancement of natural history: he encouraged the liberal and mechanic arts at home, by munificent rewards and peculiar protection: he invited above a thousand foreigners from Germany to become his subjects, and settle in certain diffricts of Jutland, which had lain waste above three centuries; and they forthwith began to build villages, and cultivate the lands, in the dioceses of Wibourg, Arhous, and Ripen: their travelling expences from Altena to their new fettlement were defrayed by the king, who, moreover, maintained them until the produce of the lands could afford a comfortable subsistence. An. 1760. He likewise bestowed upon each colonist a house. a barn and stable, with a certain number of horses and cattle. Finally, this generous patriot having visited these new subjects, who received him with unspeakable emotions of joy and affection, he ordered a confiderable fum of money to be diffributed among them, as an additional mark of his favour. Such conduct in a prince cannot fail to secure the warmest returns of lovalty and attachment in his people; and the execution of fuch laudable schemes will endear his name to the contemplation of posterity.

The Dutch, as usual, persevered in prosecuting Memorial every branch of commerce, without being divert- presented ed to less profitable schemes of state policy, by the infinuations of France, or the remonstrances of ambassa-Great Britain. The violation of the peace by their dor to the fubjects in Bengal was no fooner known at the States court of London, than orders were fent to general Yorke, the English ambassador at the Hague. to demand an explanation. He, accordingly, presented a memorial to the States General, signifying, that their High Mightinesses must, doubtless, be greatly astonished to hear, by the public papers, of the irregularities committed by their subjects in the East Indies; but, that they would be much more amazed on perufing the piece annexed to his memorial, containing a minute account, specified with the strictest regard to truth, of the irregular conduct observed by the Dutch, towards the British subjects in the river of Bengal, at a time, when the factors and traders of Holland enjoyed all the sweets of peace, and all the advantages by the British General. An. 1760.

advantages of unmolested commerce; at a time, when his Britannic majesty, from his great regard to their High Mightnesses, carefully avoided giving the least umbrage to the subjects of the United Provinces. He observed, that the king his fovereign was deeply affected by these outrageous doings, and mischievous designs of the Dutch in the East Indies, whose aim was to deftroy the British settlements in that country; an aim that would have been accomplished, had not the king's victorious arms brought them to reafon, and obliged them to fue for an accommodation. He told them his majesty would willingly believe their High Mightiness had given no order for proceeding to such extremities, and that the directors of their India company had no share in the transaction: nevertheless he (the ambassador) was ordered to demand fignal fatisfaction, in the name of the king his mafter; that all who should be found to have shared in the offence so manifeftly tending to the destruction of the English fettlements in that country, should be exemplarily punished; and that their High Mightinesses should confirm the stipulations agreed upon, immediately after the action, by the director's of the respective companies; in consideration of which agreement, the Dutch ships were restored, after their commanders acknowledged their fault, in owning themselves the aggressors. To this remonstrance the States General replied, that nothing of what was laid to the charge of their subjects, had yet reached their knowledge; but, they requested his Britannic majesty to suspend his judgment, until he should be made perfectly acquainted with the grounds grounds of those disputes; and they promised he An.1760. should have reason to be satisfied with the exemplary punishment that would be inflicted upon all who should be found concerned in violating the peace between the two nations *.

The war in Germany still raged with unrelenting the powfury, and the mutual rancour of the contending ersatwar. parties feemed to derive fresh force from their mutual disappointments; at least, the house of Auftria feemed still implacable and obstinately bent upon terminating the war with the destruction of the Pruffian monarch. Her allies however feemed less actuated by the spirit of revenge. The French king had fustained so much damage and disgrace in the course of the war, that his resources failed, and his finances fell into disorder; he could no longer afford the subsidies he had promised to different powers: while his subjects clamoured aloud at the burden of impositions, the ruin of trade, and the repeated dishonour intailed upon the arms of France. The czarina's zeal for the alliance, was evidently cooled by the irregular and defective payments of the fubfidies she had stipulated. Perhaps she was disappointed in her hope of conquest, and chagrined to fee her armies retire from Germany at the approach of every winter; and the British ministry did not fail to exert all their influence to detach her from the confederacy in which she had embarked. Sweden still languished in an effectual parade of hostilicies against the house of Brandenburgh; but the

State of

1500

the prince of Orange, and the Prince of Nassau-Weilbourg, the nuptials were folemnized at the Hague, with great magnificence.

^{. *} In the month of March the States of Holland and West Friesland having, after warm debates, agreed to the proposed match, between the princess Caroline, fister to

...

An. 1760. French interest began to lose ground in the diet of that kingdom. The king of Prussia, howsoever exhausted in the article of men, betrayed no symptom of apprehension, and made no advance towards a pacification with his adversaries. He had employed the winter in recruiting his armies by every expedient his fertile genius could devise; in levying contributions to reinforce the vast subsidy he received from England, in filling magazines, and making every preparation for a vigorous campaign. In Westphalia, the same foresight and activity were exerted by prince Ferdinand of Brunswic, who in the beginning of summer found himself at the head of a very numerous army, payed by Great Britain, and strengthened by two and twenty thousand of national troops.

Death of the landgrave of Heffe-Caffel.

No alteration in the terms of this alliance, was produced by the death of William landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, who breathed his last, in an advanced age, on the twenty-eighth day of January at Rintelen upon the Weser. He was succeeded in the landgraviate by his fon Frederick, whose confort, the princess Mary, daughter to the king of Great Britain, now, in quality of governess of her children, assumed the regency and administration of the county of Hanau-Mutzenberg, by virtue of the fettlement made in the life-time of her fatherin-law, and confirmed by her husband. for fome years been separated from him, and refided with his father, at whose decease she retired, with her children, to the city of Zell. The prefent landgrave, who lived at Magdebourg as vicegovernor under the king of Prussia, no sooner learned the news of his father's death, than he fent an intimation of it to that prince and the king of Great Britain, declaring, at the same time, that An. 1760. he would fcrupuloufly adhere to the engagements of his predecessor.

> made by neutral powers for holding a congress.

The advances towards a peace, which had been Offers made in the preceding year by the kings of England and Prussia, in their declaration published at the Hague by prince Lewis of Brunswic, seemed of a place to infuse in neutral powers a good opinion of their moderation. We have already feen that the king of Spain offered his best offices in quality of mediator. When a congress was proposed, the States-General made an offer of Breda, as a place proper for the negotiation. The king of Great Britain, by the mouth of his ambassador, thanked their High Mightinesses for the sincere desire they expressed to put an end to the ravages of war, which had extended desolation over the face of Europe: he readily closed with their gracious offer, and in consequence of his high regard and invariable friendship for their High Mightinesses, wished earnestly that it might be acceptable to the other powers at war. The French king expressed his fentiments nearly to the same purpose. His ambaffador declared, That his most Christian majesty was highly fensible of the offer they had made of Breda for holding the congress; that, in order to give a fresh proof of his sincere desire to encrease the good harmony that subsisted between him and the States General, he accepted their offer with pleasure; but as he could take no step without the concurrence of his high allies, he was obliged to wait for their answer, which could not fail to be favourable, if nothing remained to be fettled but the place for holding the congress. King Stanislaus

having

An. 1760. having written a letter to his Britannic majesty, offering the city of Nancy for the same purpose, he received a civil answer, expressing the king of England's sense of his obliging offer, which, however, he declined, as a place not conveniently situated for all the powers interested in the great work of pacification. Civilities of the same nature likewise passed between the sovereign of Nancy and the king of Prussia*. As the proposals for an accommodation, made by the king of England and his allies, might have left an unfavourable impression of their adversaries, had they been altogether declined, the court of Vienna was prevailed upon

As the Prussian monarch's answer breathes nothing but humanity and moderation, we shall insert it as a distinguishing feature of that prince's character.

Sire, my Brother,

With real pleasure I have received your majesty's letter. Certainly I should not refuse the offer you make me of the city of Nancy, if that depended on me. All the negotiations that should be carried on there under your auspices, could not but take a favourable and happy turn; but your majesty, perhaps, knows by this time, that every body's sentiments are not so pacific as yours.

The courts of Vienna and Russia have refused, in an unprecedented manner, to come into the measures which the king of England and myself proposed to them; and it is likely that they will draw the King of France into the continuance of the war, the advantages of which they alone expect to reap; but certainly they alone will be the cause of the effusion of human blood consequent on their refusal.

However, I shall not be the less grateful for your majesty's offers. If all sovereigns were endowed with your humanity, goodness, and justice, the world would not be exposed, as it is now, to desolation, ravages, massacres, and conflagrations.

I am, with fentiments of the highest esteem, and the most perfect and most sincere friendship,

Your majesty's good brother,
- FREDERICK.

to concur with her allies in a declaration professing An. 1760: their desire of peace, which declaration was delivered, on the third day of April, by the Austrian minister residing at the Hague, to his serene highness prince Lewis of Brunswic; and a paper of the same nature was also delivered to him separately by the French and Russian ministers *. These pro-

A Translation of the Declaration delivered by the Austrian Minister residing at the Hague, to his Serene Highness Prince Lewis of Brunswic, in Answer to that which his Highness had delivered on the Part of his Britannic Majesty and the King of Prussia, on the 25th of November 1759, to the Ministers of the belligerant Powers.

Their Britannic and Pruffian majesties having thought proper to make known, by the declaration delivered, on their part, at the Hague, the 25th of November last past, to the ambassadors and ministers of the courts of Vienna, Petersburg, and Verfailles, residing there,

"That being fincerely defirous of contributing to the re-establishment of the public tranquility, they were ready to send plenipotentiaries to the place that shall be judged the most convenient, in order to treat there, of this important object, with those which the belligerant parties shall think proper to authorise on their side, for attaining so salutary an end."

Her majesty the empressqueen of Hungary and Bohemia; her majesty the empress of all the Russias; and his majesty the most Christian king, equally animated by the desire of contributing to the re-establishment of the public tranquisity, on a solid and equitable footing, declare in return;

That his majesty the catholic king, having been pleased to offer his mediation in the war, which has subsisted for some years between France and England; and this war having besides, nothing in common with that which the two empresses with their allies have likewise carried on for some years against the king of Prussia.

His most Christian majesty is ready to treat of his particular peace with England, through the good offices of his catholic majesty, whose mediation he has a pleasure in aecepting.

As to the war, which regards directly his Pruffian majesty, An. 1760: festions, however, did not interrupt the operations of the campaign.

Skirmishes in Westphalia during the winter,

Though the French army under the marechal duke de Broglio remained in cantonment in the neighbourhood of Friedberg, and prince Ferdinand hadretired from Corldorff to Marpurg, where in the beginning of January he established his head-quarters, nevertheless the winter was by no means inactive. As far back as the twenty-fifth day of December. the duke de Broglio having called in his detachments, attempted to furprise the allied army by a forced march to Klein-linnes; but finding them prepared to give him a warm reception, nothing but a cannonade enfued, and he retreated to his former quarters. On the twenty-ninth colonel Luckner. at the head of the Hanoverian hunters, fell in with a detachment of the enemy, confifting of four hundred men, under the command of count Murer. These he attacked with such vigour, that the count was made prisoner, and all his party either killed or taken, except two-and-twenty who escaped. On the third day of January the marquis de Vogue majesty; their majesties, the empress-queen of Hungary and Bohemia; the empress of all the Russias; and the most Christian king, are disposed to agree to the appointing the congress proposed. But as by virtue of their treaties they cannot enter into any engagement relating to peace, but in conjunction with their allies, it will be necessary, in order that they may be enabled to explain themselves definitively upon that subject, that their Britannic and Prussian majesties should previously be pleased to cause their invitation to a congress, to be made to all the powers that are directly engaged in war against the king of Prussia; and namely, to his majesty the king of Poland, elector of Saxony, as likewise to his majesty the king of Sweden, who ought specifically to be invited to the future congress.

attacked the town of Herborn, which he carried. An. 1760. and took a small detachment of the allies who were there posted. At the same time the marquis Dauvet made himself master of Dillemburg, the garrison of the allied troops being obliged to retire into the castle, where they were close besieged. Prince Ferdinand no sooner understood their situation, than he began his march with a strong detachment for their relief, on the seventh day of the month, when he attacked and totally defeated the befiegers, took feven hundred prisoners, including forty officers, with feven pair of colours and two pieces of cannon. On that very day, the Highlanders, under major Keith, supported by the hussars of Luckner, who commanded the whole detachment, attacked the village of Eybach, where Beaufremont's regiment of dragoons was posted on the fide of Dillemburg, and routed them with great flaughter. The greater part of the regiment was killed, and many prisoners were taken, together with two hundred horses, and all their baggage. The Highlanders diftinguished themselves on this occasion, by their intrepidity, which was the more remarkable, as they were no other than raw recruits just arrived from their own country, and altogether unacquainted with discipline. On the eighth day of January Mr. de St. Germain advanced on the left of the allies, with the grenadiers of the French army, supported by eight battalions and a body of dragoons: but he was encountered by the duke of Holstein at the head of a strong detachment in the neighbourhood of Ersdorff, who, by dint of a furious cannonade, obliged him to retreat with precipitation.

No. 31.

C

After

An. 1760.

The hereditary prince of Brunswic joins the allied army.

After this attempt the French parties disappeared, and their army retired into winter-quarters in and about Franckfort on the Maine; while prince Ferdinand quartered the allies at Cassel, Paderborn, Munster, and Ofnabrug, this last place being allotted to the British troops, as being the nearest to Embden, where the reinforcements from Britain In the beginning of February, were to be landed. the hereditary prince of Brunswic, with the detachment of the allied army under his command, began his march from Chemnitz in Saxony for Westphalia, where he fafely arrived, after having affifted at a long conference in Hamelen, with his father the reigning duke, his uncle prince Ferdinand, and fome principal members of the regency of Hanover.

Exactions by the French in Westphalia.

The French general continued to fend out detachments to beat up the quarters of the allies, and lay their towns under contribution. In the beginning of March, the marquis de Blaifel marched at the head of two thousand four hundred men from Gieffen, where he commanded, to Marpurg, forced the gates of the town, and compelled the garrison of the allies to take shelter in the castle. could not pretend to undertake the fiege of the fortress, by the fire of which he was exceedingly galled, he demanded of the town a contribution of one hundred thousand florins; and carried some of the magistrates along with him as hostages for the payment of this imposition. He afterwards appeared at Hombourg, Alsfeldt, and Hartzberg. the frontier posts of the allies, but did not think proper to attack either, because he perceived that measures were taken for his reception. The French,

with

with all their boafted politeness and humanity, are An. 1760. fometimes found as brutal and rapacious as the most barbarous enemy. On pretence of taking umbrage at the town of Hanau-Muntzenberg, for having, without their permission, acknowledged the regency of the landgravate of Heffe-Caffel, they, in the month of February, ordered the magistrates of that place to pay, within the term of twenty four hours, the fum of feven hundred and fifty thousand livres, on pain of being subjected to This order was fignified by the prince de Robecq; to whom the magistrates represented the impossibility of raising such a sum, as the country was totally exhausted, and their credit absolutely destroyed, in consequence of their inability to pay the interest of the capitals negotiated in the course of the preceding year. He still insisting upon their finding the money before night, they offered to pay eighty thousand florins, which they raised with the utmost difficulty, and begged the payment of the rest might be postponed for a few weeks; but their request was rejected with dif-The garrison was reinforced by two battalions, and four squadrons dispersed in the principal squares and markets of the city, and the gates They even planted cannon in the fireets, and tarred matches were fixed to many houses, in order to intimidate the inhabitants. These expedients proving ineffectual, detachments of grenadiers entered the houses of the principal magistrates and merchants, from whence they removed all their best effects to the town-hall, where they were kept in deposit, until they were redeemed with all the money that could possibly be raised. This

t

d

n

y

of

of

ne

pg, ık

at

h, th

C

An. 1760.

exaction, so little to the honour of a civilized nation, the French minister declared to the diet at Ratisbon was agreeable to the instructions of his most christian majesty.

Skirmifh to the adthe allies at Vacha.

By way of retaliation for the cruelty practifed at Hanau, a detachment of the allied army under gevantage of neral Luckner was fent to raife contributions in Fulda, and actually carried off hostages from that city; but retired before a strong body of the enemy, who took possession of the place. From hence the French marched, in their turn, to plunder the towns of Hirchfeldt and Vacha. Accordingly they appeared at Vacha, fituated on the frontiers of Hesse, and forming the head of the chain of cantonments which the allies had on the Werra. This place was attacked with fuch vigour, that colonel Freytag, who commanded the post, was obliged to abandon the town; but he maintained himself on a rising-ground in the neighbourhood, where he amused the enemy, until two battalions of grenadiers came to his affiftance. Thus reinforced, he pursued the French for three leagues. and drove them with confiderable loss from Geiffa. where they had resolved to fix their quarters. These skirmishes happened in the beginning of May, when the grand armies were just in motion to begin the campaign.

Situation of the French armies.

By this time the forces under the marechal duke de Broglio were augmented to one hundred thoufand: while the count de St. Germain commanded a separate army on the Rhine, consisting of thirty thousand men, affembled from the quarters of Dusfeldorp, Cologn, Cleves, and Wefel. cond corps was intended to divide the allied army; which, by fuch a division, would be considerably An. 1760 weakened; and the French court threatened to form a third army, under the prince de Soubife; but this did not appear. . The duke de Broglio was in fuch high favour with the French ministry at this juncture, that he was promoted over the heads of many old generals, who now demanded and obtained their dismission; and every step was taken to render the campaign glorious to this admired commander: but, notwithstanding all their care, and his own exertion, he found it impossible to take the field early in the feafon, from want of forage for his cavalry. While his quarters were established at Franckfort, his troops were plentifully supplied with all forts of provision from the Upper Rhine; but this convenience depended upon his being master of the course of the river: but he could not move from this polition without forfeiting the advantage, and providing magazines for the use of his forces, so that he was obliged to lie inactive until he could have the benefit of green forage in his march.

which,

The fame inconveniences operated more powerfully on the fide of prince Ferdinand, who, being in an exhausted country, was obliged to fall back as far as Paderborn, and draw his supplies from Hamburgh and Bremen on the Elbe and the Wefer. By this time, however, he had received a reinforcement of British troops from Embden, under the direction of major-general Griffin; and before the end of the campaign the forces of that nation in Germany were augmented to five and twenty thousand; a greater number than had served at

The allied army is put in motion.

An. 1760. one time upon the continent for two centuries. The allied army marched from their cantonments on the fifth day of May, and proceeded by the way of Paderborn to Fritzlar, where, on the twentieth, they encamped: but part of the troops left in the bishopric of Munster, under general Sporcken, were ordered to form a camp at Dulmen, to make head against the French corps commanded by the count de St. Germain.

Exploit of colonel Luckner at Butzbach.

General Imhoff was fent with a detachment to Kirchayn on the Orme; and general Gilsoe, with another corps, advanced to the neighbourhood of Hirchfeld on the Fulda. The former of these having ordered colonel Luckner to fcour the country with a body of huffars, that officer, on the twenty-fourth day of May, fell in with a French patrole, which gave the alarm at Butzbach, when the garrison of that place, amounting to five hundred piquets, under general Waldener, fled with great precipitation. Being, however, pursued and overtaken near a wood, they were routed and difpersed. Colonel Luckner, entering Butzbach, found a considerable quantity of forage, flour, wine, and equipage, belonging to the fugitives. What he could not carry off, he distributed among the poor inhabitants, and returned to general Imhoff's camp at Ameneburg, with above an hundred This excursion alarmed the enemy to prisoners. fuch a degree, that their whole army was put in motion; and the duke de Broglio, in person, advanced with a large body of troops as far as Freidberg: but understanding the allies had not quitted their camp at Fritzlar, he returned to Franckfort, after after having cantoned that part of his army in the An. 1760. Wetteraw. This alarm was not fo mortifying as the fecession of the Wirtemberg troops, amounting to ten thousand men, commanded by their duke in person, who left the French army in disgust, and returned to his own country. The Imperial army, under the prince de Deuxponts, quartered at Bamberg, began their march to Naumberg on the twentieth of May; but one of their detachments . of cavalry having received a check from a body of Prussians near Lutzen, they fell back; and on the fourth day of June encamped at Lichtenfels upon the Maine. The small detachments of the grand armies, as well as those belonging to the bodies commanded by general Sporcken and the count de St. Germain in the neighbourhood of Duffeldorp, skirmished with various success. The hereditary prince of Brunswic being detached from the allied army, with some battalions of grenadiers and two regiments of English dragoons, advanced to the county of Fulda, where he was joined by the troops under general Gilsoe, and atchieved fome inconfiderable exploits, particularly at Hofenfeldt and Zielbach, where he furprised and took divers parties of the enemy.

By the twenty-fourth of June prince Ferdinand, The quitting his fituation at Fritzlar, marched to Frillendorf, and encamped on the bills between Ziegenheim and Freyla, general Imhoff commanding stadt. at a small distance on the right, and the hereditary prince, now returned from Fulda, being posted on the left of the army. In the mean time, the duke de Broglio, affembling his forces between Merlau

C 4

French advance

An. 1750. and Laubach, 'advanced to Neustadt, where he encamped on the twenty-eighth day of the month, and at the same time occupied a strong post at Wasfemburg. His intention was to penetrate through the country of Heffe into Hanover, and make himfelf intirely mafter of that electorate. With this view he refolved to effect a junction with the count de St. Germain, whom he directed to advance towards Brilau and Corbach: while he himself, decamping from Neuftadt on the eighth day of July, advanced by the way of Franckenberg. Prince Ferdinand, having received intelligence that the count de St. Germain was in motion, began his march from Ziegenheim, and on the ninth day of July reached the heights of Brunau, in the neighbourhood of Wildungen.

The hereditary prince of Brunswic worfted at Corbach.

The hereditary prince, at the head of the advanced corps, reinforced with fome battalions and fouadrons under major general Griffin, was fent forwards to Saxenhausen, whither the army followed the next morning. The hereditary prince. continuing to advance, found the enemy already formed at Corbach; but judging their whole force did not exceed ten thousand infantry and seventeen foundrons, and being impelled by the impetuofity of his own courage, he resolved to give them battle. He accordingly attacked them about two in the afternoon, and the action became very warm and obstinate: but the enemy being continually reinforced with fresh battalions, and having the advantage of a numerous artillery, all the prince's efforts were ineffectual. Prince Ferdinand, being at too great a distance to sustain him,

fent

fent him an order to rejoin the army, which was An. 1760. by this time formed at Saxenhausen. He forthwith made dispositions for a retreat, which however was attended with great confusion. The enemy. observing the disorder of the allied troops, plied their artillery with redoubled diligence; while a powerful body of their cavalry charged with great vivacity. In all likelihood the whole infantry of the allies would have been cut off, had not the hereditary prince made a diversion in their favour, by charging in person at the head of the British dragoons, who acted with their usual gallantry and effect. This respite enabled the infantry to accomplish their retreat to Saxenhausen; but they loft above five hundred men, and fifteen pieces of cannon. General count Kielmanfegg, major-general Griffin, and major Hill of Bland's dragoons. diffinguished themselves by their conduct and intrepidity on this occasion. The hereditary prince exposed his life in the hottest part of the action. and received a flight wound in the shoulder, which gave him far less disturbance than he felt from the chagrin and mortification produced by his defeat.

Many days, however, did not pass, before he He refound an opportunity of retaliating this diffrace: trieves his Prince Ferdinand, receiving advice that a body of honour the enemy, commanded by major general Glaubitz, had advanced on the left of the allies to Ziegenheim, detached the hereditary prince to oppose them, at the head of fix battalions of Hanoverians and Hessians, with Elliot's regiment of English light horse, Luckner's hussars, and two brigades of chaffeurs; on the fixteenth day of the month.

at Exdor£

An. 1760. month, he engaged the enemy near the village of Exdorff, and a very warm action enfued, in which Elliot's regiment fignalized themselves remarkably by repeated charges*. At length victory declared for the allies. Five battalions of the enemy, including the commander in chief, and the prince of Anhalt-cothen, were taken with fix pieces of cannon, all their arms, baggage, and partillery. During these transactions, the marechal duke de Broglio remained encamped on the heights of Corbach. He had, in advancing from Franckfort, left detachments to reduce the caftles of Marpurg and Dillemburg, which were occupied by the allies, and they fell into his hands, the garrisons of both being obliged to surrender prifoners of war. These were but inconsiderable conquests; nor did the progress of the French general equal the idea which had been formed of his talents and activity. The count de St. Germain, who was his fenior officer, and believed by many to be at least his equal in capacity, having now joined his corps to the grand army, and conceiving difgust at his being obliged to serve under the duke de Broglio, relinquished his command, in which he was succeeded by the chevalier de Muy. trieves life honour At the same time, the marquis de Voyer, and at Exdorf. the count de Luc, two generals of experience my at every charge: but these exploits they did not atchieve without sustaining a heavy loss in officers, men, and horses.

^{*} Though this was the first time that Elliot's regiment appeared in the field, it performed wonders. They charged five different times, and broke through the ene-and reputation, quitted the army, and returned to An. 1760. France, actuated by the same motives.

The allied army having moved their camp from Victory Saxenhausen to the village of Halle, near Cassel, remained in that fituation till the thirtieth day of lies at July, when the troops were again put in motion. The chevalier de Muy, having passed the Dymel at Stadtbergen, with the referve of the French army, amounting to thirty-five thousand men, and extending this body down the banks of the river, in order to cut off the communication of the allies with Westphalia; while the duke de Broglio marched up with his main wing to their camp at Kalle, and prince Xavier of Saxony, who commanded their referve on the left, advanced towards Caffel; prince Ferdinand, leaving general Kielmansegge with a body of troops for the defence of this city, decamped in the night of the thirtieth, and paffed the Dymel without lofs, between Liebenau and Dringleberg. The hereditary prince, who had the preceding day passed the same river, in order to reinforce general Sporcken, who was posted near Corbeke, now reconnoitred the polition of the enemy, and found them possessed of a very advantageous camp between Warbourg and Ochsendorff. Prince Ferdinand, having refolved to attack them, ordered the hereditary prince and Mr. Sporcken to turn their left, while he himself advanced against their front, with the main body of the army. The enemy was accordingly attacked, almost at the fame instant, both in flank and in rear, with equal impetuofity and fuccess. As the infantry of the allied obtained by the albourg.

by the at

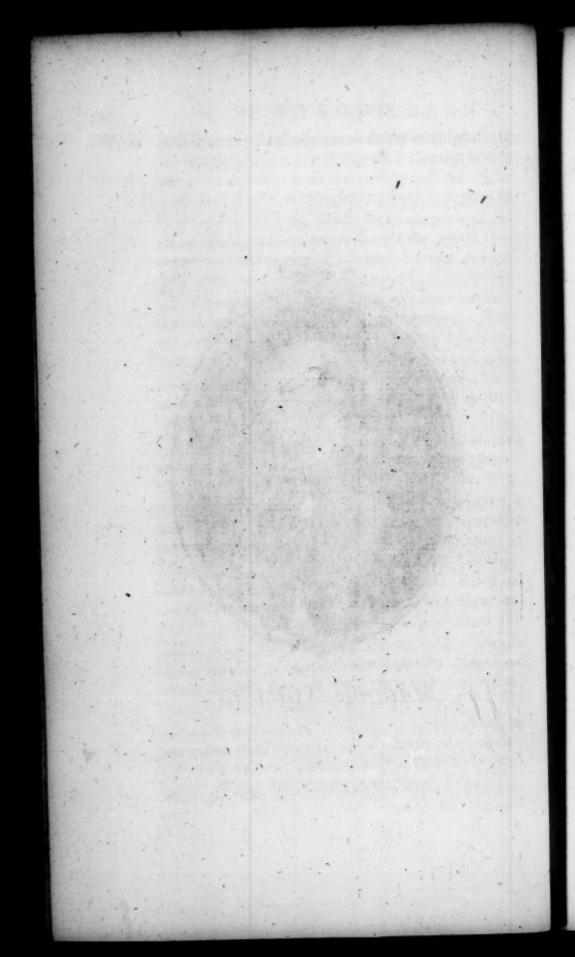

.grand

An. 1760. allied army could not march fast enough to charge at the same time, the marquis of Granby was ordered to advance with the cavalry of the right; and the brigade of English artillery, commanded by captain Philips, made fuch expedition, that they were up in time to fecond the attack in a most furprising manner. The French cavalry, though very numerous, retreated at the approach of the marquis, except three squadrons, who stood the charge, and were immediately broken. Then the English horse fell upon the enemy's infantry, which suffered greatly, while the town of Warbourg was affaulted by the Britannic legion. The French, finding themselves hard pressed on both flanks, as well as in front and rear, retired precipitately, with confiderable damage, occasioned chiefly by the British cannon and dragoons, and many were drowned in attempting to ford the Dymel. The battalion of Maxwell, and a brigade under colonel Beckwith, composed of grenadiers and Highlanders, diftinguished themselves remarkably on this occasion. The enemy left about fifteen hundred men, killed or wounded, on the field of battle; with some colours, and ten pieces of cannon, and about the fame number were made prisoners. Monsieur de Muy lay all night under arms, on the heights of Volk-Missen, from whence he next day retired towards Wolfshagen. On the evening of the battle, the marquis of Granby received orders to pass the river in pursuit of them, with twelve British battalions, and ten squadrons, and encamped at Wilda, about four miles from Warbourg, the

MARQUIS of GRANBY.

e e of di-

the heights of which were possessed by the enemy's An. 1760grand army *.

By

* Copy of a Letter from the Marquifs of Granby to the Earl of Holdernesse.

My LORD,

It is with the greatest satisfaction, that I have the honour of acquainting your lordship of the success of the hereditary prince, ye terday morning.

General Sporcken's corps marched from the camp at Kalle to Liebenau, about four in the afternoon of the twenty ninth; the hereditary prince followed the fame evening, with a body of troops, among which were the two English battalions of grenadiers, the two of Highlanders, and four squadrons of dragoons, Cope's and Conway's.

The army was under arms all day on the thirtieth, and, about eleven at night, marched off in fix columns to Liebenau. About five the next morning, the whole army affembled, and formed on the heights near Corbeke. The hereditary pince was, at this time, marching in two columns, in order to turn the enemy's left flank; which he did by marching to Donhelbourg, leaving Klein-Eder on his left, and forming in two lines, with his left towards Doffel, and his right near Grimbeck, opposite to the left flank of the enemy, whose position was, with the left to the high hill near Offendorff. and their right to Warbourg, into which place they had flung Fischer's corps. hereditary prince immediately attacked the enemy's flank, and, after a very sharp difpute, obliged them to give way, and, by a continual fire, kept forcing them to fall back upon Warbourg. The army was, at this time, marching with the greatest diligence to attack the enemy in front; but the infantry could not get up in time : general Waldegrave, at the head of the British, pressed their march as much as poffible: no troops could shew more eagerness to get up, than they shewed. Many of the men, from the heat of the weather, and over-straining themselves to get on, through moraffy and very difficult ground, fuddenly dropped down on their march.

General Mostyn, who was at the British cavalry, that was formed on the right of our infantry on the other side of a large wood, upon receiving the duke's orders to come

An. 1760. By this success, prince Ferdinand was enabled to maintain his communication with Westphalia, and keep the enemy at a distance from the heart of Hanover; but to these objects he sacrificed the country of Cassel: for, prince Xavier of Saxony, at the head of a detached body, much more numerous than that which was left under general Kielmansegge, advanced towards Cassel, > up with the cavalry as fast as possible, made so much expedition, bringing them up at a full trot, though the diftance was near five miles, that the British cavalry had the happiness to arrive in time, to share the glory of the day, having fuccessfully charged, feveral times, both the enemy's cavalry and infantry.

> I should do injustice to the general officers, to every officer and private man, of the cavalry, if I did not beg your lordship would affure his majesty, that nothing could exceed their gallant behaviour on that occasion.

> Captain Philips made fo much expedition with his cannon, as to have an opportunity, by a fevere cannonade, to oblige those who had paffed the Dymel, and were formed on the other fide, to retire with the utmost precipitation.

> I received his ferene highness's orders, yesterday in the evening, to pass the ri ver after them, with the twelve British battalions and ten fquadrons, and am now encamped upon the heights of Wilda, about four miles from Warbourg, on the heights of which their grand army is encamped.

M. de Muy is now retiring from the heights of Volkmiffen, where he lay under arms last night, towards Wolfshagen. I cannot give your lordship an account of the loss on either side. Captain Faucitt, whom I fend off with this, shall get all the intelligence he can upon this head, before he sets off.

> I am, &c. GRANBY.

P. S. Saturday morning, fix o'clock.

As I had not an opportunity of fending off captain Faucit fo foon as I intended, I opened my letter to acquaint your lordship that I have just joined the grand army with my detachment.

and

and made himself master of that city; then he An. 1760. reduced Munden, Gottingen, and Eimbeck, in the electorate of Hanover. All that prince Ferdinand could do, confidering how much he was out-numbered by the French, was to fecure posts and passes with a view to retard their progress. and employ detachments to harrass and surprise their advanced parties. In a few days after the action at Warbourg, general Luckner repulsed a French detachment, which had advanced as far as Eimbeck, and surprised another at Nordheim. At the same period, colonel Donap with a body of the allied army attacked a French corps of two thousand men, posted in the wood of Sababourg, to preserve the communication between their grand army, and their troops on the other fide of the Weser; and, notwithstanding the strength of their situation, drove them from their post, with the loss of five hundred men, either killed or made prisoners; but this advantage was overbalanced by the reduction of Ziegenhain. garrisoned by seven hundred men of the allied army, who, after a vigorous relistance, were obliged to furrender themselves prisoners of war. On the fifth day of August, prince Ferdinand being encamped at Buhne, received intelligence that a confiderable body of the enemy, amounting to upwards of twenty thousand men, were in motion to make a general forage in the neighbourhood of Geismar. He passed the Dymel early in the morning, with a body of troops, and some artillery, and posted them in such an advantageous manner, as to render the enemy's attempt totally ineffectual.

An. 1760. ineffectual, although the foragers were covered with great part of their army.

The hereditary prince beats up the quarters of the French at Zierenberg.

On the same morning, the hereditary prince set out on an expedition to beat up the quarters of a French detachment. Being informed that the volunteers of Clermont and Dauphine, to the number of one thousand, horse and foot, were cantoned at Zierenberg, at a small distance from the French camp at Dierenberg, and passed their time in the most careless security, he advanced towards them from his camp at Warbourg, within a league of their cantonment, without feeing any of their posts, or meeting with any of their patroles; a circumstance that encouraged him to beat up their quarters by furprize : for this fervice he pitched upon five battalions, with a detachment of Highlanders, and eight regiments of dragoons. Leaving their tents standing, they began their march at eight in the evening, and passed the Dymel near Warbourg. About a league on the other fide of the Dymel, at the village of Witzen, they were joined by the light troops under major Bulow; and now the disposition was made, both for entering the town, and fecuring a retreat, in case of being repulsed. When they were within two miles of Zierenberg, and in fight of the fires of the enemy's grand guard, the grenadiers of Maxwel, the regiment of Kingsley, and the Highlanders, advanced by three feparate roads, and marched in profound filence: at length, the noise of their feet alarmed the French, who began to fire; then the grenadiers proceeded at a round pace with unloaded firelocks, pushed the piquets, flew flew the guard at the gate, and rushing into the An. 1760 town, drove every thing before them with incredible impetuofity. The attack was fo fudden, and the furprize fo great, that the French had not time to affemble in any considerable number; but they began to fire from the windows, and, in fo doing, exasperated the allied troops, who, bursting into the houses, slaughtered them without mercy. Having remained in the place from two till three in the morning, they retreated with about four hundred prisoners, including forty officers; and brought off two pieces of artillery. This nocturnal adventure, in which the British troops displayed equal courage and activity, was atchieved with very little loss; but, after all, it deserves no other appellation, than that of a partizan exploit, for it was attended with no fort of advantage to the allied army.

Confidering the great superiority of the French Petty adarmy, we cannot account for the little progress made by the duke de Broglio, who, according to fides. our conception, might either have given battle to the allies with the utmost probability of fuccess: or penetrated into the heart of Hanover, the conquest of which seemed to be the principal object of the French ministry. Instead of striking an important stroke, he retired from Immenhausen towards Cassel, where he fortified his camp as if he had thought himself in danger of being attacked; and the war was carried on by fmall detachments. Major Bulow, being fent with a strong party from the camp of the allied army at Buline, furprised the town of Marpurg, destroyed the French ovens. and brought off a confiderable quantity of stores NUMB. XXXII. and

vantages on both

An. 1760. and baggage, with some prisoners. He met with the same success at Butzbach, where he surprised and took two companies belonging to the regiment of Raugrave, and retired with his body to Frankenberg, where he joined colonel Forfen. On the twelfth day of September they made a movement towards Franckenau; and M. de Stainville. who was posted with a body of French troops at Merdenhagen, advanced to check their progress. He came up with their rear in the neighbourhood of Munden, and attacked them in passing the river Orck, with fuch vigour, that Forlen, with some of his cavalry, was taken, and Bulow obliged to abandon fome pieces of cannon. The action was just determined, when this last was reinforced by the hereditary prince of Brunswick, who had made a forced march of five German miles, which had fatigued the troops to fuch a degree, that he deferred his attack till next morning; but, in the mean time, M. de Stainville retired towards Frankenburg. The Hanoverian general Wangenheim, at the head of foun battalions and fix fquadrons, had driven the enemy from the defiles of Soheite, and encamped at Lawenthagen: but, being attacked by a fuperior number, he was obliged, in his turn, to give way, and his retreat was not effected without the loss of two hundred men, and some pieces of artillery. When the enemy retired, general Wangenheim repaffed the Wefer, and occupied his former fituation at Uffar, Mean while, general Luckner gained anadvantage, over a detachment of French cavalry, near Norten. Prince Ferdinand, when marechal Broglio quitted his camp at Immenhausen, made a motion a motion of his troops, and established his head- An. 1760. quarters at Geifmar-wells, the relidence of the landgrave of Heffe Caffel; from thence, however, he transferred them, about the latter end of September, to Ovilgune, on the Westphalian side of the Dymel.

1

di

t

n.

1

al

le

n

Such was the polition of the two oppolite grand. The hearmies, when the world was furprised by all expedition to the Lower Rhine, made by the hereditary prince of Brunswick. Whether this excursion the Lower was intended to hinder the French from reinforc- Rhine. ing their army in Westphalia, or to co-operate in the Low Countries, with the armament now ready equipped in the ports of England; or to gratify the ambition of a young prince, overboiling with courage, and glowing with the delire of conquest; we cannot explain to the satisfaction of the reader: certain it is, the Austrian Netherlands were, at this juncture, entirely destitute of troops, except the French garrisons of Oftend and Nieuport, which were weak and inconfiderable. Had ten thousand English troops been landed on the coast of Blankenburg, they might have taken possesfion of Bruges, Ghent, Bruffels, and Antwerp, without relistance, and joined the hereditary prince in the heart of the country: in that case, he would have found himself at the head of thirty thousand men, and might have made fuch a diversion in favour of Hanover, as to transfer the feat of war from Westphalia into Flanders. The empress queen might indeed have complained of this invalion, as the formality of declaring war against her had not been observed by Great Britain ; but, confidering that the was the declared enemy of Hanover, and reditary prince

An. 1760.

had violated the barrier treaty, in establishing which the kingdom of Great Britain had lavished away fo much blood and treasure; a step of this kind, we apprehend, might have been taken, without any imputation of perfidy or injustice. Whatever the motives for the prince's expedition might have been, he certainly quitted the grand army of the allies, in the month of September. and, traverling Westphalia, with twenty battalions, and as many foundrons, appeared on the Lower Rhine, marching by Schermbeck and Duffeldorp. On the twenty-ninth day of the month, he fent a large detachment over the river at Rocroort. which surprised part of the French partizan Fischer's corps at Rhynberg, and scoured the country. Next day, other parties, croffing at Rees and Emmerick, took possession of some redoubts, which the French had raifed along the bank of the river; and here they found a number of boats, fufficient to transport the rest of the forces. Then the prince advanced to Cleves, and, at his approach, the French garrison, consisting of five hundred men, under the command of M. de Barral, retired into the caftle, which, however, they did not long defend; for on the third day of October, they capitulated, and furrendered themfelves prisoners of war, after having in vain endeavoured to obtain more favourable conditions.

He comes to Wefel, and is worfted at Campen. A more important object was Wesel, which the prince invested, and began to besiege in form. The approaches were made on the right of the Rhine, while the prince in person remained on the lest to cover the siege; and kept his communication open with the other side, by a bridge above, and another below the place. He had hoped to An. 1760. carry it by a vigorous exertion, without the formality of a regular fiege, but he met with a warmer reception than he expected; and his operations were retarded by heavy rains, which, by fwelling the river, endangered his bridges, and laid his trenches under water. The difficulties and delays occasioned by this circumstance entirely frustrated his design. The French, being made acquainted with his motions, were not flow in taking measures to anticipate his success. M. de Castries was detached after him, with thirty battalions, and thirty eight fquadrons; and, by forced marches, arrived, on the fourteenth day of October, at Rhynberg, where the prince's light troops were posted. These he attacked immediately, and compelled to abandon the post, notwithstanding all the efforts of the prince, who commanded in person, and appeared in the warmest parts of this short but sanguinary affair. enemy, leaving five battalions, with some squadrons, at Rhynberg, marched by the left, and encamped behind the convent of Campen. prince, having received intimation, that M. de Castries was not yet joined by some reinforcements, that were on the march, determined to be beforehand with them, and attempt that very night to surprise him in his camp. For this purpose, he began his march at ten in the evening. after having left four battalions, and five fquadrons, under general Bock, with instructions to observe Rhynberg, and attack that post, in case the attempt on Campen should succeed. Before the allied forces could reach the enemy's camp, they

D 3

An. 1760.

they were under the necessity of overpowering Fischer's corps of irregulars, which occupied the convent of Campen, at the distance of half a league in their front. This fervice occasioned fome firing, the noise of which alarmed the French army. Their commander formed them with great expedition, and posted them in a wood, where they were immediately attacked, and, at first, obliged to give ground; but they foon retrieved all they had loft, and fustained, without flinching, an unceasing fire of musquetry, from five in the morning till nine at night, when they reaped the fruits of their perseverance. The hereditary prince, whose horse was killed under him, seeing no prospect of fuccess in prolonging an action, which had already cost him a considerable number of men, thought proper to give orders for a retreat. which was not effected without confusion, and left the field of battle to the enemy. His loss, on this occasion, did not fall short of sixteen hundred choice men, killed, wounded, and taken; and this loss fell chiefly on the troops of Great Britain, who were always found in the foremost ranks of danger. All their officers, both of in-fantry and dragoons, distinguished themselves remarkably, and many were dangerously wounded. Among thefe, the nation regretted the loss of lord Downe, whose wounds proved mortal: he was a young nobleman of spirit, who had lately embraced a military life, though he was not regularly trained in the fervice.

He repaffes the 3 Rhine. Next day, which was the fixteenth of October, the enemy attacked an advanced body of the allies, which was posted in a wood before Elverick, and extended along the Rhine. The firing of An. 1760. cannon and musquetry was maintained till night. Mean while, a column of the French infantry, commanded by M. de Chabot, marched through Walach, and took post among the thickets, at the distance of a quarter of a league, in the front of the prince's army. By this time, the Rhine was fo much swelled by the rains, and the banks of it were overflowed in fuch a manner, that it was necessary to repair and move lower down the bridge, which had been thrown over that river. This work was accordingly performed in prefence of the enemy, and, the prince, paffing without moleftation, proceeded to Bruynen. where he fixed his head-quarters. His paffing the Rhine so easily, under the eye of a victorious army, fo much superior to him in number, may be counted among the fortunate incidents of his life. Such was the iffue of an expedition, which exposed the projector of it to the imputation of temerity. Whatever his aim might have been, besides the reduction of Wesel, with the strength of which he did not feem to have been very well acquainted, he certainly miscarried in his design, and his miscarriage was attended with a very confiderable loss of troops, occasioned not only by the action, but also by the diseases engendered from the wet weather, the fatigue of long marches, and the want of proper conveniencies, not to mention the enormous expence in contingencies, incurred by this fruitless undertaking.

LORD DOWNE.

In the month of November, while he lay encamped in the neighbourhood of Schermbeck, a body of the enemy attempted to beat up his quarAn. 1760.
Attempt of the enemy against the hereditary prince.

ters: having received intimation of their defign, he immediately called in his advanced posts, and made a disposition for giving them a proper reception. He abandoned the tents that were in the front of his camp, and posted his infantry in ambuscade behind those that were in the rear: at the fame time he ordered some regiments of horse and hussars to fetch a compass, and fall upon the back of the enemy. The stratagem succeeded to his wish. The French detachment, believing the allies had actually abandoned their camp, began to pillage the tents in the utmost disorder: then the infantry fallied from the place where they were concealed, and fell upon them with great impetuofity: the artillery opened, and the cavalry charged them in flank. In a word, of twelve hundred who marched from Wesel on this expedition, scarce two hundred escaped.

Advantage gained by M. de Stainville.

The duke de Broglio endeavoured, by fundry means, to take advantage of the allied army on the other fide of the Weser, thus weakened by the absence of the troops under the hereditary prince; but he found prince Ferdinand too vigilant to be surprised, and too strongly situated to be attacked with any prospect of success. He therefore contented himself with ravaging the country by detachments: he fent M. de Stainville with a considerable body of forces to penetrate into the heart of Hanover; and on the fifteenth day of September, that officer falling in with a detachment of the allies, commanded by major Bulow, attacked them near the abbey of Schaken. After a warm and obstinate engagement, they were defeated and driven to Bulemont, with the loss of their cannon, baggage, and a good number of men, who fell An. 1760. into the hands of the victors. After this exploit, M. de Stainville advanced to Halberstadt, and demanded of that capital a contribution of one million five hundred thousand livres: but the citizens had been fo drained by former exactions, that they could not raise above thirty thousand : for the remainder the French partizan took hostages, with whom he returned to the grand army encamped at Caffel, from whence they, in a little time, fell back as far as Gottingen.

As the enemy retreated prince Ferdinand ad- The alvanced as far as Hurste, where he established his lies and head-quarters about the latter end of November. While he remained in this position, divers skirmishes winterhappened in the neighbourhood of Gottingen. quarters. Major-general Breidenbach, at the head of two regiments of Hanoverian and Brunswick guards. with a detachment of cavalry, attacked on the twenty-ninth day of November, the French post at Heydemunden, upon the river Worrau. This he carried, and took poffession of the town, which the enemy hastily abandoned. Part of their detachment croffed the river in boats; the rest threw themselves into an intrenchment that covered the passage, which the allies endeavoured to force in feveral unfuccessful attempts, galled as they were by the fire of the enemy's redoubts on the other. fide of the river. At length M. Breidenbach was obliged to defift and fall back into the town, from ' whence he retired at midnight, after having fuftained confiderable damage. Prince Ferdinand had it very much at heart to drive the French from

French go into

Au. 1760. Gottingen, and accordingly invested that city; but the French garrison, which was numerous and well provided, made fuch a vigorous defence as baffled all the endeavours of the allies, who were moreover impeded by the rainy weather, which, added to other confiderations, prevented them from undertaking the fiege in form. Neverthelefs, they kept the place blocked up from the twentyfecond day of November to the twelfth of the following month, when the garrison, in a desperate fally, took one of their principal posts, and compelled them to raise the blockade. About the middle of December prince Ferdinand retired into winter-quarters, he himself residing at Uslar, and the English troops being cantoned in the bishopric of Paderborn. Thus the enemy were left in poffession of Hesse, and the whole country eastward of the Weser to the frontiers of the electorate of Hanover. If the allied army had not been weakened, for the fake of a rash, ill-concerted, and unfuccessful expedition to the Lower Rhine, in all probability the French would have been obliged to abandon the footing they had gained in the course of this campaign, and in particular to retreat from Gottingen, which they now maintained and fortified with great diligence and circumfpection.

Exploit of the Swedes in Pomerama.

The king of Prussia, after all his labours, notwithstanding the great talents he had displayed, and the incredible efforts he had made, still found himfelf furrounded by his enemies, and in danger of being crushed, by their closing and contracting their circle. Even the Swedes, who had languished fo long, seemed to be roused to exertion in Po- An. 1760. merania, during the feverity of the winter feafon. The Prussian general Manteusfel had, on the twentieth day of January, passed the river Peene, overthrown the advanced posts of the enemy at Ziethen, and penetrated as far as the neighbourhood of Grieffwalde; but finding the Swedes on their guard, he returned to Anclam, where his head-quarters were established. This insult was foon retaliated with interest. On the twentyeighth day of the month, at five in the morning. a body of Swedes attacked the Prussian troops posted in the suburbs of Anclam, on the other side of the Peene, and drove them into the city, which they entered pell-mell. General Manteuffel, being alarmed, endeavoured to rally the troops, but was wounded and taken, with about two hundred men and three pieces of cannon. The victors. having atchieved this exploit, returned to their own quarters. As for the Russian army, which had wintered on the other fide of the Vistula, the feason was pretty far advanced before it could take the field; though general Tottleben was detached from it, about the beginning of June, at the head of ten thousand Cossacks, and other light troops. with which he made an irruption into Pomerania. and established his head-quarters at Belgard.

At the beginning of the campaign the king of Skir-Prussia's chief aim was to take measures for the preservation of Silesia, the conquest of which feemed to be the principal object with the court of Vienna. While the Austrian army, under marechal count Daun, lay Brongly intrenshed in mishes the Pruffians and Austrians in Saxo-Dy.

the

Aufrigns

An. 1760. the neighbourhood of Dresden, the king of Prussia had endeavoured, in the month of December, to make him quit that advantageous fituation, by cutting off his provisions, and making an irruption into Bohemia. For these purposes he had taken possession of Dippeswalde, Maxen, and Pretchendorff, as if he intended to enter Bohemia by the way of Passberg: but this scheme being found impracticable, he returned to his camp at Frevberg; and in January the Prussian and Austrian armies were cantoned fo near each other, that daily skirmishes were fought with various success. The head of the Prussian camp was formed by a body of four thousand men under general Zettwitz, who, upon the twenty ninth day of January, was attacked with fuch impetuofity by the Auftrian general Beck, that he retreated in great confusion to Torgau, with the loss of five hundred men, eight pieces of artillery, and a confiderable quantity of new cloathing, and other baggage. Another advantage of the same nature was gained by the Austrians at Neustadt over a small body of Pruffians who occupied that city. In the month of March general Laudohn advanced with a strong detachment of horse and foot, in order to surprise the Pruffians, who, in attempting to effect a retreat to Steinau, were furrounded accordingly, and very roughly handled. General Laudohn fummoned them twice by found of trumpet to lay down their arms; but their commanders, the captains Blumenthal and Zittzwitz, rejecting the proposal with disdain, the enemy attacked them on all hands with a great superiority of number. In this this emergency the Prussian captains formed their An. 1760. troops into a fquare, and by a close continued fire kept the enemy at bay; until, perceiving that the Croats had taken poffession of a wood between Siebenhausen and Steinau, they, in apprehension of being intercepted, abandoned their baggage. and forced their way to Steinau, which they reached with great difficulty, having been continually harraffed by the Austrians, who paved dear for this advantage. Several other petty exploits of this kind were atchieved by detachments on both fides, before the campaign was begun by the grand armies.

Towards the end of April the king of Pruffia Polition altered his polition, and withdrew that part of his of the chain of cantonments, extending from the forest armies in of Thurundt to the right of the Elbe. He now and Siletook poffession of a very strong camp, between the sia. Elbe and the Mulda, which he intrenched in every part that was accessible, and fortified with two hundred and fifty pieces of cannon. By these precautions he was enabled to keep his ground against the army of count Daun, and at the fame time detach a body of troops as a reinforcement to his brother prince Henry, who affembled a separate army near Frankfort upon the Oder, that he might be at hand either to oppose the Russians, or march to the relief of Silesia, which the enemy was bent upon invading. It was for this purpose that the Austrian general Laudohn advanced with a considerable army into Lusatia about the beginning of May, and general Beck with another body of troops took possession of Cotbus: mean while count

An 1760, count Dann continued in his old fituation on the Elbe ; general Lacy formed a fmall detached army upon the frontiers of Saxony, to the fouthward of Drefden: and the prince de Deuxponts marched into the fame neighbourhood with the army of the empire. Prince Henry of Pruffia, having encamped with his army for fome time at Sagan in Silefiz moved from thence to Gorlitz in Lularia. to observe the motions of general Laudohn, encamped at Koningforatz; from whence, in the beginning of June, he marched into the county of Glaza and advanced to the neighbourhood of Schweidnitz, which he feemed determined to befieger having a train of eighty pieces of cannon. With a view to thwart his deligns, prince Henry reinforced the body of troops under general Four quer: and at the fame time he fent a detachment into Pomerania under colonel Leflow, who defeared the rear-guard of general Tottlebent and competted that officer to evacuate Pomerania. By this time, however, the marechal Soltikoff had arrived from Peterfourg, and taken the command of the grand Raffan army, which paffed the Viftula in Tune, and begun its march towards the fromthere of Silefia.

Laudohn defeats Fouquet, and re-Glatz.

duces

In the month of June general Laudohn made an unfluceful attempt to carry Glatz by affault: but he fucceeded better in his next enterprize. Understanding that general Fouquet, who occupied the post at Landshut, had weakened himself by lending off detachments under the major-generals Ziethen and Grant, he refolved to attack hitt with fuels a fuperiority of number, that he should!

not be able to relift. Accordingly, on the twenty. At 1760 third day of June, at two in the morning, he began the affault with his whole army upon fome redoubts which Fouquet occupied, and thefe were carried one after another, though not without a very desperate opposition. General Fouquet being fummoned to furrender, refused to submir and having received two wounds, was at length taken prisoner: about three thousand of his men escaped to Brellau: the rest were killed, or taken; but the loss of the victors is faid to have exceeded that of the vanquished. In July general Laudohn undertook the fiege of Glatz, which was taken after a very faint refiftance: for, on the very day that the batteries were opened against the place, the garrifon abandoned part of the fortifications, which the beliegers immediately occupied. The Pruffiane made repeated efforts to regain the ground they had loft; but they were repulfed in all their attempts. At length the garrifon laid down their arms, and furrendered at discretion. From this tame behaviour of the Pruffians, one would imagine the garrison must have been very weak; a circumstance which we cannot reconcile with the known fagacity of the Proffian monarch, as the place was of great importance, on account of the immense magazine it contained, including above one hundred brass cannon, a great number of

Laudohn, encouraged by his fuccels at Glatz, He unadvanced immediately to Breflau, which he began dertakes to bembard with great fury ; but, before he could the fiege mortars, and a vast quantity of ammunition.

The Germans are in ge- neers, and little acquainted lau; neral' but indifferent engi- with the art of beffeging:

An. 1760. make a regular attack, he found himself obliged to retire.

Prince

On this occasion the Austrian general had no other prospect than that of carrying the place by a fudden attack, or intimidating count Tavenzein the governor, into an immediate furrender; for he knew the Ruffian army was at a confiderable distance, and judged from the character of prince Henry of Pruffia, that he would advance to the relief of the place, long before it could be taken according to the usual forms. Influenced by these considerations, when he had invested the town, he fent a letter to the governor, specifying, that his army confifted of fifty battalions and fourscore squadrons; that the Ruffian army, amounting to feventy-five thousand men, was within three days march of Breflau: that no fuccour could be expected from the king of Prussia, encamped as he was on the other fide of the Elbe. and over-awed by the army of count Daun; that prince Henry, far from being in a condition to bring relief, would not be able to stand his ground against the Rusfians; that Breslau being an open mercantile town, not a fortress, could not be defended without contravening. the established rules of war :

and therefore the governor, in case of obstinacy, had no reason to expect an honourable capitulation, the benefit of which was now offered. He, at the same time, sent a memorial to the civil magistrates, threatening their town with destruction, which could by no other means be prevented than by joining with the inhabitants in perfuading the governor to embrace immediately the terms that were proposed. Count Tavenzein, instead of being intimidated, was encouraged by these menaces, which implied an apprehension in Laudohn, that the place would be relieved. He therefore replied to the fummons he had received, that Breslau was not fimply a mercantile town, but ought to be confidered as a place of strength. as being furrounded with works and wet ditches; that the Austrians themselves had defended it as fuch after the battle of Lissa, in the year one thousand seven hundred and fifty-feven; that the king his mafter having commanded him to defend the place to the last extremity, he could neither comply with general. Laudohn's propofals, nor pay the least regard to his threats

Prince Henry of Prussia, one of the most ac- An 1760. complished generals which this age produced, having received repeated intelligence that the Ruffian army intended to join Laudohn at Breslau, resolved to advance, and give them battle, before the purposed junction. In the latter end of July he began his march from Gleissen, and on the last day of that month had reached Linden near Slauve, where he understood that Tottleben's detachment which is relieved by prince Henry of

Pruffia.

threats of destroying the town, as he had not been intrusted with the care of the houses, but with the defence of the fortifications. The Austrian convinced him that fame evening, that he threatened nothing but what he meaned to perform. | He opened his batteries, and poured in upon the town a most terrible shower of bombs and red-hot bullets, which continued till midnight. During this dreadful discharge, which filled the place with horror and desolation, he attempted the outworks by The Croats attackaffault. ed the covered way in different places with their usual impetuofity; but were repulsed with confiderable loss, by the conduct and resolution of the governor and garrison. These proceedings having made no impretion upon Tavenzein, the belieging general had recourse again to negociation, and offered the most flattering articles of capitulation, which were re-Numb. 32.

jected with disdain. The governor gave him to understand, that the destruction of the town had made no change in his refolution, though it was a practice contrary to the law of arms, as well as to the dictates of common humanity, to begin the fiege of a fortress by ruining the inhabitants: finally, he affured him he would wait for him upon the ramparts, and defend the place to the utmost of his power. His observation was certainly just: nothing could be more infamoully inhuman than this practice of making war upon the helpless unarmed inhabitants of a town, which has the misfortune to be beleaguered; yet the besieger pleaded the example of the P-m-, who had before acted the same tragedy at Drefden. Laudohn being thus fet at defiance, continued to batter and bombard, and feveral fubsequent affaults were given to the fortifications.

E

only

An. 1760.

only had paffed through the plains of Polnich-Lissa, and that the grand Russian army had marched through Kosten and Gustin. The prince, finding it impossible to pursue them by that route, directed his march to Glogau, where he learned that Breflau was befieged by general Laudohn, and immediately advanced by forced marches to its relief. Such was his expedition, that in five days he marched above one hundred and twenty English miles, and at his approach the Austrian general Thus, by his pruabandoned his enterprize. dence and activity, he not only prevented the junction of the Russian and Austrian armies; but also faved the capital of Silefia, and hampered Laudohn in such a manner as subjected him to a defeat by the Prussian monarch, to whose motions we shall now turn our attention.

The king of Pruffia makes an unfuccefsful attempt upon Drefden.

Whether his defign was originally upon Drefden, or he purposed to co-operate with his brother prince Henry in Silefia, which his adverfaries feemed to have pitched upon as the scene of their operations. we cannot presume to determine: but certain it is, he, in the beginning of July, began his march in two columns through Lufatia; and count Daun being informed of his march, ordered his army to be put in motion. Leaving the army of the empire, and the body of troops under Lacy, to guard Saxony in his absence, he marched with great expedition towards Silesia, in full persuasion that the Prussian monarch had thither directed his route. On the feventh day of July, the king knowing that Daun was now removed at a distance, repassed the Pulsnitz, which he had passed but two days before, and advanced with the van of his army towards Lichtenberg, in order to attack the forces of gene- An. 1760. ral Lacy, who was there posted; but the Austrian retired at his approach. Then the army marched to Marienstern, where the king received intelligence that count Daun was in full march for Lauban, having already gained two marches upon the Prussians. Perhaps it was this intimation that determined the king to change his plan, and return to the Elbe. On the eighth day of the month he repassed the Sprehe, in the neighbourhood of Bautzen, and marched towards Drefden with extraordinary diligence. On the thirteenth his army having passed the Elbe at Kadetz, on a bridge of boats, encamped between Pirna and Dresden, which last he resolved to besiege, in hope of reducing it before count Daun could return to its relief. How far this expectation was well-grounded, we must leave the reader to judge, after having observed, that the place was now much more defensible than it had been, when the last attempt of the Austrians upon it miscarried; that it was secured with a numerous garrison, commanded by general Macguire, an officer of courage and experience. This governor being fummoned to furrender, answered, that having the honour to be intrusted with the defence of the capital, he would maintain it to the last extremity. Batteries were immediately raifed against the town on both fides of the Elbe; and the poor inhabitants subjected to a dreadful visitation, that their calamities might either drive them to despair, or move the heart of the governor to embrace articles of capitulation: but these expedients proved ineffectual. Though the suburbs towards the

An. 1760. Pirna gate were attacked and carried, this advantage made no impression on general Macguire, who made feveral vigorous fallies, and took every neceffary precaution for the defence of the city, encouraged moreover by the vicinity of Lacy's body and the army of the empire; encamped in an advantageous polition near Gros Seydlitz; and confident that count Daun would haften to his relief. In this hope he was not disappointed: the Austrian general finding himself duped by the stratagem of the Prussian monarch, and being made acquainted with his enterprize against Dresden, instantly wheeled about, and marched back with fuch rapidity, that on the nineteenth day of the month, he reached the neighbourhood of the capital of Saxony. In consequence of his approach the king of Prussia, whose heavy artillery was now arrived, redoubled his efforts against the city, so as to reduce to ashes the cathedral church, the new square, several noble streets, some palaces, together with the curious manufactory of porcelaine. His vengeance must have been levelled against the citizens; for it affected neither the fortifications, nor the Austrian garrison, which count Daun found means to reinforce with fixteen battalions. This fupply, and the neighbourhood of three hostile armies, rendered it altogether impossible to prosecute the fiege with any prospect of fuccess; the king, therefore, abandoned the undertaking, withdrew his troops and artillery, and endeavoured to bring Daun to a battle, which that general cautiously avoided.

The fate of this prince seemed now at its criss. An.1760. Notwithstanding all the efforts of his brother The king prince Henry, the Russians were fast advancing to marches join Laudohn, who had already blocked up Schweidnitz and Niefs, and their junction feemed to threaten the loss of all Silesia. The king had nothing to appole to fuperior numbers, but fuperior activity, of which he determined to avail himfelf without delay. Instead of making a feint towards Silefia, he refolved to march thither in earnest; and for that purpose, crossing the Elbe, encamped at Dallwitz, on the farther bank of the river, leaving general Hulfen with fifteen thousand men in the intrenched camp of Schlettow, to maintain his footing in Saxony. On the third day of August he began his march for Silesia, followed by count Daun with the grand Auftrian army. while the detached body under Lacy took post at Rechenberg, and the imperial army encamped at Keffeldorf. Both the Pruffians and Austrians marched at the rate of one hundred miles in five days: on the tenth the king took possession of the camp of Lignitz; and here he seemed in danger of being quite furrounded by the enemy, who occupied the whole ground between Parchwitz and Cossendau, an extent of thirty miles. Daun's army formed the centre of this chain. possessing the heights of Wahlstadt and Hochkirk: general Laudohn covered the ground between Teschkendorf and Coschitz: the rising-grounds of Parchwitz were fecured by general Nauendorff; and M. de Beck, who formed the left, extended his troops beyond Coffendau. The king marched, into Sile-

An. 1760. in the night of the eleventh, with a view to turn the enemy, and reach Jauer: but at break of day he discovered a new camp at Prausnitz, which confifted of Lacy's detachment, just arrived from Lauban. The Pruffians immediately paffed the Katzbach to attack this general; but he made such a skilful disposition for a retreat towards the army of count Daun, that he not only baffled the endeavours of the king to bring him to action, but, by posting himself on the heights of Hennersdorff, anticipated his march to Jauer. In vain the Pruffian monarch attempted next day to turn the enemy on the fide of the mountains, by Pomsen and Jagersdorff; the roads were found impassible to the ammunition-waggons, and the king returned to the camp at Lignitz.

obtains a victory over Laudohn;

While he remained in this fituation he received advice, that four and twenty thousand Ruffians, under count Czernichew, had thrown bridges over the Oder at Auras, where they intended to cross that river, and he concluded the enemy had formed a defign to close him in, and attack him with their joint forces. Daun had, indeed, projected a plan for furprifing him in the night, and had actually put his army in motion for that purpose; but he was anticipated by the vigilance and good fortune of the Prussian monarch. That prince. reflecting that if he should wait for his adversaries in his camp, he ran the rifque of being attacked at the same time by Lacy on his right, by Daun in his front, and by Laudohn on his left, he altered his polition, in order to disconcert their operations; and, on the fourteenth day of the month, marched marched to the heights of Pfaffendorff, where he An 1760. formed his army in order of battle. Receiving intimation, about two in the morning, that Laudohn was in full march, advancing in columns, by Bennowitz, he divided his army into two separate bodies. One of these remained on the ground, in order to maintain the post against any attempts that might be made by count Daun to fuccour Laudohn; and that this service might be the more effectually performed, the heights were fortified with batteries, fo judiciously disposed as to impede and over-awe the whole Austrian army. The king, having taken this precaution, wheeled about with fixteen battalions and thirty squadrons, to fall upon Laudohn as he should advance; but that general knew nothing of his design, until he himself arrived at the village of Pfaffendorff about three in the morning, when the day dawning, and a thick fog gradually dispersing, the whole detachment of the Prussian army appeared in order of battle, in a well-chosen situation, strengthened with a numerous train of artillery, placed to the best advantage. Laudohn was not a little mortified to find himself caught in his own fnare; but he had advanced too far to recede, and therefore, making a virtue of necessity, resolved to stand an engagement. With this view he formed his troops, as well as the time, place, and circumstances would permit; and the Prussians advancing to the attack, a severe action enfued. The king rode along the line to animate the troops, and superintended every part of the charge, hazarding his life in the most dangerous fcenes of the battle to fuch a degree, that his horse

An. 1760. was killed under him, and his cloaths were shot through in feveral places. The Austrians maintained the conflict with great obstinacy until fix in the morning, when they gave ground, and were purfued to the Katzbach, beyond which the king would not allow his troops to profecute the advantage they had gained, that they might be able to succour the right, in case marechal count Daun should succeed in his attempt to advance against them from Lignitz. That general had actually begun his march to fall upon the Prussians on one fide, while Laudohn should attack them on the other; but he was not a little furprifed to find they were decamped, and when he perceived a thick cloud of smoke at a distance, he immediately comprehended the nature of the king's management. He then attempted to advance by Lignitz; but the troops and artillery which had been left on the height of Psaffendorff, to dispute his march, were fo advantageously disposed as to render all his efforts abortive. Laudohn is said to have lost in the action above eight thousand men, killed, wounded, and taken, including eighty officers, with twentythree pair of colours, and eighty-two pieces of cannon: over and above this lois, the Austrian general fuffered greatly by defertion. The Pruffians obtained the victory at the expence of one general, with five hundred men killed, and twelve hundred wounded. Immediately after the action the victor marched to Parchwitz; while Daun detached prince Lowenstein and general Beck, with the reserve of his army, to join prince Czernichew, who had croffed the Oder at Auras; but he was so intimidated dated by the defeat at Lignitz, that he forthwith An. 1760. repassed the river, and prince Lowenstein retired on the fide of Jauer. By this bold and well-conducted adventure, the Prussian monarch not only escaped the most imminent hazard of a total defeat from the joint efforts of two strong armies, but also prevented the dreaded junction of the Russian and Austrian forces.

Schweid-

His bufiness now was to open the communica- raises the tion with Breslau, and his brother prince Henry, blockwhom he joined at Neumarcke. The prince, after Laudohn was obliged to relinquish the fiege of nitz. Breslau, had kept a watchful eye over the motions of the Russian army, which had advanced into the neighbourhood of that city, and, without all doubt, would have bombarded it from fome commanding heights, had not they been prevented by prince Henry, who took poffession of these posts, and fortified them with redoubts. The king, having freed Breslau from the neighbourhood of his enemies, and being strengthened by the junction with his brother, left a considerable detachment under the command of general Goltze, to protect the country against the Russian irregulars; and advanced with his whole force to the relief of Schweidnitz, which was blocked up by the Auftrian army under the command of the marechal count Daun. In his march he fell upon a separate body under general Beck, made two battalions of Croats prisoners, and dispersed several squadrons. This atchievement had fuch an effect upon the enemy, that they raised the blockade, and retreated with some precipitation to the mountains of Landfhut.

While

An. 1760.
Action between general Hulfen and the imperial army in Saxony.

While the king thus exerted himself, with a spirit altogether unexampled, in defending Silesia, general Hulsen, who commanded his troops in Saxony, was exposed to the most imminent danger. Understanding that the army of the empire had formed a delign to cut off his communication with Torgau, he quitted his camp at Meissen, and marched to Strehla. The enemy having divided their forces into two bodies, one of them, on the twentieth day of August, attacked an advanced post of the Prussians; while the other was disposed in such a manner as to over-awe Hulsen's camp, and prevent him from taking any step for the relief of his battalions, who maintained their ground with difficulty against the superior number of the affailants. In this emergency the Pruffian general ordered his cavalry to make a circuit round a rifingground, and, if possible, charge the enemy in flank. This order was executed with equal vigour and fuccess. They fell upon the imperial army with such impetuofity, as drove their battalions and horse upon each other in the utmost confusion. A confiderable number of the enemy were flain, and forty one officers, with twelve hundred men, made prisoners. By this advantage, which was obtained at a very small expence, general Hulsen opened for himself a way to Torgau, whither he instantly retreated, perceiving that the whole army of the Imperialifts was advancing to cut off his communication with the Elbe: this retreat furnished the enemy with a pretext for claiming the victory.

After all these heroic endeavours of the Prussian monarch and his officers, his affairs remained in fuch

fuch a desperate situation as seemed to presage ap. An. 1760. proaching ruin e for, though in person he commanded a numerous and well appointed army, he rous fitufound it absolutely impossible to guard against the different detachments from the three separate armies of his adversaries. Bodies of Austrian troops parch. scoured the country of Lusatia: the Russians traversed part of Silesia, and made irruptions even into Brandenburg: the imperial army domineered in Saxony: the Swedish army, meeting with no opposition, advanced into the heart of Pomerania: fo that the king was not only threatened on every fide, but all correspondence between him and his hereditary dominions was at this * juncture intercepted.

Dangeation of the Pruffian mo-

His

* In this uncomfortable fituation he is faid to have written the following letter to the marquis D'Argens, author of the Jewish Spy, and feveral other elegant performances, a native of France, but refiding at Berlin under the shadow of the king's protection and friendship.

" Formerly, my dear marquis, the affair of the 15th of August would have decided a campaign. At prefent that action is no more than a scratch; a great battle must determine our fate. We shall have one, according to all appearances, very foon; and then, if the event is favourable to us, we may rejoice.

It required many stratagems and much address to bring things to this pass. Don't talk to me of danger; the last action cost me only a suit of cloaths and a horse. This is buying victory very cheap.

I have not had the letter which you mention. We are in a manner blocked up, in regard to correspondence, by the Russians on one side the Oder, and by the Austrians on the other. A small skirmish was necessary to clear the way for Cocceii; I hope that he will deliver you my letter; I never was, in the course of my life, in a more embarrassing situation than in this campaign. Believe An. 1760.

His adversaries, having been hitherto baffled by his activity and resolution, in their designs upon Silesia, me, nothing less than a miracle is still necessary to extricate me from the difficulties that I foresee. I shall certainly do my duty when occasion offers; but, my dear marquis, always remember that I pretend not to command fortune, and that I am obliged, in my projects, to leave too much to chance, for want of being able to form any more folid. I have the labours of a Hercules to undergo, at a time of life when my strength fails me, my infirmities increase, and, to fpeak the truth, when hope, the only confolation of the unhappy, begins to defert me. You are not fufficiently acquainted with the circumstances of affairs to have a clear idea of all the dangers which threaten the state; I know, but conceal them; I keep all my fears to myself, and only communicate to the public my hopes, or the little good news that I can acquaint them with. If the blow that I meditate fucceeds, then, my dear marquis, it will be time enough to express our joy: but till then, let us not flatter ourselves, for fear some unexpected bad news should deject us too much.

I lead here the life of a military monk. I have much to think of about my affairs, and the rest of my time I devote to literature, which is my consolation, as it was of the consul, the father of his country and of eloquence. I know not if I shall survive this war; but I am determined, in case it should happen, to pass the rest of my days in retirement, in the bosom of philosophy and friendship.

When our correspondence shall be more open, you'll oblige me by writing more frequently. I know not where we shall have our winter-quarters. My houses at Breslau were destroyed by the bombardment. Our enemies envy us every thing, even daylight and the air we breathe. They must however leave us some place, and if it is safe, it will be a treat to receive you there.

Well, my dear marquis, what is become of the peace with France? Your nation, you fee, is more blind than you imagined. Those fools lose Canada, and Pondicher-

Silesia, now meditated a scheme, the execution of An. 1760. which he could not but feel in the most fensible The Rufmanner. The Ruffian army being on its retreat fians and from Silefia, count Czernichew was fent with a Austrians strong detachment into the Marche of Brandenburg; while a numerous body of Austrians, under Lacy and Brentano, penetrated into the same Brandencountry from Saxony, with instructions to join the Russians at the gates of Berlin. The Prussian general Hulfen, finding himfelf too weak to cope with the army of the empire in Misnia, had fallen back to this capital, where he was joined by the troops under general Werner, lately returned from Pomerania: but as their forces, after this junction. did not exceed fixteen thousand men, and the allies advancing against them amounted to forty thousand, they would not pretend to oppose the enemy in the open field, nor to defend a city of fuch extent, and so imperfectly fortified. Such an attempt would have only exposed their troops to ruin, without being able to fave the capital, which, on the contrary, would have been the more severely handled, in consequence of their opposition. They therefore resolved to retire, after having remake an irruption

ry, to please the queen and the czarina. Heaven grant that prince Ferdinand may well reward them for their zeal. The officers, innocent of these evils, and the soldiers, will be made the victims, and the illustrious offenders will fuffer nothing.

These are the subjects which offer themselves to me. I was in a writing vein, but I fee that I must conclude, lest I should tire you and neglect my own business. Adieu, my dearest marquis .- I embrace you, &c."

pulsed

An. 1760. pulsed the advanced guard of the Russians under Tottleben, which attacked the gates, and even bombarded the town, before the great armies appeared.

and poffess themfelves of Berlin.

At their approach the Prussian generals retreated. leaving three weak battalions in the place, in hope they might be the means of obtaining some fort of terms for the city. They made no reliftance, however; but on the first summons proposed articles of capitulation, which being refused. they furrendered themselves prisoners of war. favour of the city the foreign ministers there refiding interposed their mediation with such zeal and fuccess, that tolerable conditions were obtained. The inhabitants were indulged with the free exercise of their religion, and an immunity from violence to their persons and effects. The enemy promifed that the Russian irregulars should not enter the town; and that the king's palace should not be violated. These articles being ratified, the Austrian and Russian troops entered the blace, where they totally destroyed the magazines, arfenals, and founderies, with an immense quantity of military stores, and a great number of cannon and fmall arms: then they demanded the immediate payment of eight hundred thousand guilders; and afterwards exacted a contribution of one million nine hundred thousand German crowns. Many outrages were committed by the licentious foldiery, in spite of all the precautions which the officers could take to preserve the most exact discipline. The houses of the private inhabitants were tolerably protected; but the king's palaces were were subjected to the most rigorous treatment *. An. 1760. In the royal palace of Charlottenburg they pillaged

An account of the barbarous manner, in which the Ruffian, Austrian, and Saxon troops, laid waste the marche of Brandenburgh; and of the cruelties they committed in the month of October, 1760, in their expedition against the city of Berlin.

Published at Berlin by Authority.

However enormous the cruelties were, to which the king's dominions were a prey last year, one would imagine that his majesty's enemies wanted to out-do themselves in this respect, by their barbarous conduct this year. It would in fact feem, that after four unsuccessful campaigns, they thought they frould more easily obtain their ends, by means equally shocking to humanity, and inconfiftent with the practice of civilized nations, than by endeavouring to terminate the war by arms, and the superiority of their forces.

In this light all the operations of this campaign, and in particular the famous expedition against Berlin, naturally present themselves before the impartial public. The whole united forces of the house of Austria, in conjunction with the numerous armies of Ruffia, have overrun Silesia, not with a view to fight battles, or get poffeffion of the fortreffes by regular fieges; but to carry fire and fword into a province, which they are pleafed to confider at Vienna as part of the incontestable dominions of the house of Austria. Towns that were already laid under contribution, have, nevertheless, been plundered and facked: Landshut, in particular, furnishes a memorable example of this conduct, fo contrary to all the laws of The capital, and other fortresses in Silesia, of which they could not make themfelves mafters by stratagem. or other indirect methods. for want of artillery to lay fiege to them, have been bombarded without any hopes of fuccess: one would think they did it only for the pleafure of beholding a great number of houses and public edifices, on fire.

That unfortunate province would doubtless have been irrecoverably ruined, had not Providence thought proper to set bounds to their excesses, and to humble them by an

An. 1760. laged and spoiled the rich furniture; they defaced and mutilated the valuable pictures, and

an-event which destroyed all their flattering hopes. The battle of Lignitz stopt the execution of their vast designs, and disconcerted their plan for the rest of the campaign. Three armies, each of them fuperior in number to that of the king, which had even entirely furrounded him, and which counted fo much on the fuccess of the measures they had taken to overwhelm him, that they had even fixed the day which was to decide his fate, were, by this victory, reduced for a long time to total inaction, and obliged to think more of defending themselves, than of forming offensive enterprises. Ruffians retreated towards the frontiers of Poland, fetting fire to every place where they had received any loss, or apprehended an attack. The two Austrian armies shut themselves up in the hills of Silefia, and opposed those natural barricades to the efforts which his majesty made to come to blows with them. There they waited for the iffue of the diversion which the policy of their court was to procure to be made. Marshal Soltikoff remained the whole month of September, without daring to make the least motion, in presence of the fmall corps under general Goltz; the operations of his troops being confined to the desolating those parts of Lower Silefia that were in his power. But as this proceeding could not deliver the Austrian army from its confined position, which in the end might prove fatal to it, the court of Vienna again had recourse to these methods, which it employs with fo much success to extricate itfelf from a dilemma, and prevailed with the Russians to invade the Marche of Brandenburgh.

For this end the generals Czernichef and Tottleben were detached with upwards of 20,000 men, and general Lacy was fent against Berlin with 14,000 from the Austrian army. The whole Russian army followed at a small distance, to sustain this grand enterprize. But each party wanting to get before the othe, general Tottleben, without waiting for the arrival of the large corps of troops, appeared on the 3d of October before Berlin, with 2000 light troops and fome foot. He immediately summoned

antique statues collected by cardinal de Polignac, An. 1760. and purchased by the house of Brandenburg. The caftle moned it, and upon its refufing to furrender, he threw into the town fome hundreds of royal grenades, bombs, and red hot balls, in hopes of obtaining by fire and by terror, what he could not promise himself from his forces. The three affaults made on Halle-gate, were repelled; and the flames, which had broke out in five different parts, were happily extinguished. The prudent meafures taken by the Pruffian generals who were at Berlin, at last obliged the Russian general to retire without effecting his purpose. Mean while, prince Eugene of Wurtemburgh, and lieutenant-general Hulfen, had come to the affiftance of the capital, and for fome time put a ftop to the enemy's enterprises: they would probably have obliged them wholly to drop their defign, had not count Czernichef, on one fide, and general Lacy on the other, come up with their troops. At the fame time the grand Ruslian army arrived at Francfort on the Oder, and general Panin, with feven regiments, was detached towards Berlin, to fustain general Czernichef; and he could be followed Numb. 32.

every day by fresh detachments.

The two Pruffian generals above-mentioned, feeing the great superiority of the enemy, would not expose the city to the precarious iffue of a battle, and resolved to give it time to capitulate, in order to prevent the calamities to which it might be exposed; accordingly they withdrew on the 6th, before day-break, to Spandau, and the governor and the magistrates made separate capitulations with general Tottleben. It was agreed that the town should be delivered up to the Ruffians; that the garrison, confifting of two battalions of Itzenplitz's regiment, and one battalion of Ludenitz's militia, should be prisoners of war; and that, on paying a contribution of 1,500,000 crowns, and 200,000 as a gratuity to the troops, for which the town was obliged to become bound, it should enjoy full liberty, protection and fafety, while the enemy staid in it. The prisoners, who, at the most, amounted but to 1200 men, and not to 4000. as the foreign news-papers have given out, were carried off; and the cadets, who could An 1760. castle of Schonhausen, belonging to the queen, and that of Fredericksfeld, the property of the

mar-

could not be comprehended in the capitulation, which mentions only generals, officers, subalterns, and soldiers, were carried away with the rest on foot. Though scarce above ten or twelve years old, their tender age could not secure them from this hard usage, which, we hear, hath already put an end to many of their lives.

According to the public news-papers, the Ruffian generals divided them among themselves, to take the keeping of them, as if they were flaves condemned to perpetual captivity. Nevertheless they can be confidered only in two lights: if they were prifoners of war, they ought to be exchanged; and, if they were not, they were unjustly carried away, and ought to be immediately discharged.

By virtue of the capitulation concluded with general Haddick in 1757, the city of Berlin was no more to be molefted or burthened by the Austrians during the whole course of this war : nevertheless, some Austrian regiments took up their quarters by force, and against the will of the Ruffians, at Frederickstadt, and in the New Town, where, by this act of violence, and the excesses of every kind which they were guilty of, they gave fresh proofs how little they regard their own engagements. salatatiq to

The capitulation made with general Tottleben was no better observed, either by the Ruffians or Austrians. By the third article of the two capitulations for the garrison, and the town, it was fettled. that no foldier should be quartered in the city or fuburbs; that the light troops should not be permitted to enter the place; and that both the royal palaces and private houses should be entirely fafe, and not be exposed to pillage : nevertheless, feveral Austrian regiments took up their quarters in the town, as hath just been mentioned. They even lived at discretion: and, not content with eating and drinking at the expence of their landlords, they compelled them to give them money, goods, and whatever they asked. There are but few inhabitants of Berlin, whom these guests did not cost hundreds or thousands of crowns. The town was, in a manner, over-run with coffacks, huffars, and other light troops, margrave Charles, were pillaged of effects to a An. 1760. very confiderable value. The palace of Potsdam was

the

troops, who robbed both in the streets and in the houses, and wherever they came. Nor were the regular troops wholly free from this reproach: the Austrians, in particular, diftinguished themfelves in thefe exploits. On a careful enquiry it hath been found, that 282 private houses were broke and plundered, and the inhabitants compelled, by the most barbarous acts of violence, to part with money, watches, and whatever the foldiers had a mind to. A very great number of persons were beat, cut with fwords, and abused in fuch a cruel manner, that many are still in danger of their lives from the wounds they received. A woman named Schack was found dead on the quay of Collen, with her body disfigured by wounds. People scarce dared to appear in the ftreets for fear of being robbed; and most of those, whose business obliged them to be abroad in the evening, or at night, were ftripped of every thing. The king's stables, which by the capitulation were not to be touched, were a principal object of the enemy's ravage, though the Ruffian commander had placed there a fafeguard of twenty-four men. All his majesty's coaches, which could not, furely, be reckoned implements of war, were broke to pieces, after being stripped of the velvet. embroidery, and lace; and the apartments of M. Schwerin, one of the king's equerries, which are over the stables, were plundered. The hospital for invalids, and the hospital called la Charité, those retreats of the unhappy, the infirm, and the indigent, which one would imagine, the most cruel enemy would have respected, were not spared, but pillaged, and exposed to other excesses of different kinds. In the church of Jerusalem the Austrians robbed the vestry and the poor's box, and opened fome graves to strip the dead. It must be acknowledged, that general Tottleben, and brigadier Bachman, who was appointed vice-governor, endeavoured to maintain order and discipline in the city, and that they even put a stop to fome excesses committed by the troops: but most of the disorders were suffered to pass unpunished; and by the exceffes committed in breach of An. 1760. was effectually protected by prince Esterhasi, who would not fuffer one article of furniture or ornament

the capitulation, the city fuftains a loss of some hundred thousand crowns, over and above the enormous contribution exacted from it.

Nevertheless, what happened at Berlin was nothing compared to what was done in the small towns and the flat country, the whole, from the gates of Berlin to the diftance of feveral miles, being laid totally desolate. In particular the Austrian, Russian, and Saxon troops joined to leave the most detestable marks of their rage and inhumanity at the castle of Charlottenbourg. Esterhafi's Auftrian huffars, and the Saxon uhlans, diftinguished themselves in this exploit, and their officers looked on unconcerned. Whole squadrons entered the castle on the 9th of October, and plundered it for four days successively, without receiving the least check from either general or officer. All the tapestry was torn down; looking-glaffes, pictures, tables, chairs, china, in fhort, all that was of any value, was broke or fpoilt, except a large quantity of effects which some greedy officers took for themselves, and fent away in covered waggons. Even the king's chapel, that facred place, which the most savage nations would have respected, was ravaged, and profaned by their nastiness, and the organs broke. In the apartments of the castle, the pictures of the royal family were spoilt and disfigured, and feveral statues of the celebrated cabinet of cardinal Polignac, valuable monuments of antiquity, were mutilated or damaged. In fhort, fuch havock was made at this country feat, that fcarce any thing more than the walls can properly be faid to be left. Nevertheless, the plunder got here did not fatisfy the enemy's greediness. nor fecure the inhabitants of the town from being plundered, though they had ranfomed themselves by the payment of 15,000 crowns in ready money. Every thing was taken from them; and what could not be carried away was broke or destroyed. Several inhabitants were horsewhipped and cut with fabres; of which two died. Even the women, without diftinction of age, were exposed to the rage of the enemy, and made victims of their brutality.

Schoen-

ment to be touched; but defired leave to take one An. 1760. picture of the king, and two of his german-flutes, that

Schoenhausen, the queen's country house, shared much the same fate. A Russian subaltern arrived there on the 8th of October, with eight huffars, and demanded, with grievous threats, her majefty's plate. In vain he was told, that it had been carried long before to a place of fafety: they fearched the castle, and, not finding what they wanted, pulled down, and tore the tapestry and the curtains, and, taking what they liked, went to the house of the keeper of the caftle, stripped him and his wife, beat him with rods and whips, and even pinched them with red-bot pincers in such a cruel manner, that both are still dangerously ill. The generals Czernichef and Tottleben, being informed of these cruelties, promised, indeed, to put a stop to them; but instead thereof, the castle was totally desolated between the oth and the 12th. All the tapestry and curtains left after the former vifit were torn, and the chairs, pictures, and china, broke to pieces. In short, Schoenhausen was made a defart; nor did the officers belonging to it, or the village of Pankow, which adjoins to

e

1.

C-

d

10-

it, fare better. A servant belonging to the castle was laid on the fire in his own apartment, and the minister's sootman hacked to death with sabres. The women were dishonoured in the most barbarous manner: all the cattle were driven away, and every house and barn emptied.

The palace of the margrave Charles at Friedrichfelde received the fame treatment from the Ruffians; and most of the provincial towns met with no more favour. Frankfort, in particular, was most grievously harraffed many ways, though the enemy's generals had given the magiftrates affurances in writing, that they had no farther exactions to fear. Lieutenant colonel Roschewsky lighted a large fire in the great fquare. with which he threatened to fet the city in flames. burgomaster was whipped in a cruel manner, and all the magistrates threatened with the same treatment. By these violent measures they extorted great quantities of cloth, linen, and forage, and a contribution of 50,000 crowns, besides what was given under the title of extraordinaries, which, how-F 3 ever, An. 1760. that he might preserve them as memorials of an illustrious prince, whose heroic character he admired.

ever, did not prevent many acts of cruelty and robbery from being committed in that town, where the damage amounts to above 200,000 crowns.

The fate of Copenick, Furstenwald, Beskow, Alt-Lansberg, Strausberg, Orangeberg, Lubenwalde, and, in general, all the towns in the Marche, where the enemy came, was equally hard. They were forced to pay contributions, and to furnish things much above their abilities, and, after all, were exposed to pillage and shocking acts of cruelty. But nothing can come up to the dreadful fight which the flat country presents, from Berlin to the frontiers of Poland, Silefia. and Saxony, wherever the enemy have been. The villages are entirely plundered, and the country people left destitute both of corn and cattle. Their beds, their furniture, and, in short, all they had, is carried off. The corn which the enemy could not use, or carry off, they scattered about, and threw into the dirt. All the cattle. cows, as well as horses, oxen. and sheep, were taken : above 100,000 head paffed through Frankfort. villages were fet on fire, particularly Schoneberg and fhort, Groffen-Beer. In wherever they came, they beat and abused the inhabitants in the most cruel manner, and barbaroufly dishonoured the women, without distinction of age or condition, in presence of their parents and husbands. In fine, to fill up the measure of their deeds of inhumanity and horror, they laid aside all regard to the sepulchres of the dead, which have always been held in a kind of veneration by the most barbarous nations. The troops under general Lacy, in their return thro' Wilmersdorff, an estate belonging to the Schwerin family, broke open the burying vault, opened the coffin of the master of the horse to the king, who had been dead 12 years, and those of his lady and children, stript the bodies, and threw them on the ground. These barbarities. of which the history of the least civilized nations furnishes few examples, will be handed down to the most diftant posterity, and perpetuate the shame of Prussia's enemies.

What

mired. The Austrian and Russian troops entered An. 1760. Berlin on the ninth day of October, and quitted it on

What is faid above, is only a brief fummary, and as it were the out-lines of the scene of devastation which the king's enemies made in the Marche in their last invasion. A detail of particulars would fill volumes. But no fact has been mentioned. but what any one may be convinced of by the testimony of their own fenses. We have not taken the liberty to make ill-grounded and exaggerated complaints, fuch as are those of a court, which employs venal pens to excite false compassion, by magnifying the evilsit hath brought on itself through its own fault. It is well known how it filled Europe with its clamours, when its capital, defended by its allies as if it had been a regular fortress, fustained, more thro' their fault, than that of the befiegers, the natural confequence of a fiege; while it appears quite infensible at the fate of the city of Wittenberg, which those very allies reduced to ashes without any necessity, and almost without having fired against the ramparts. It forgets probably, or wants to make the public forget, that its allies made no scruple to bombard likewise without necessity, and for the most part without success. Zittau, Schweidnitz, Custrin. Colberg, Breslau, Berlin, and Cosel: and that in this manner they reduced a part of those towns to ashes, and greatly damaged the rest. That court would at present have great reason to make the most ferious reflections on the obligation it lies under to its troops and those of its allies, for the conduct they have held, if the king were disposed to follow bad examples, and to relatiate on the subjects of Saxony the calamities which his fubjects have been so unjustly made to suffer. But his majesty's manner of thinking will always prevent his recurring to fuch rigorous methods, till he be forced to it by indispensable necessity. He detests this illicit manner of making war the more, as it contributes fo little to the end for which war is waged. This truth appears evident from the last expedition of the enemy into the Marche. They found it very eafy to flip, as it were, into Brandenburgh, with an army of 80,000 men, and to make themselves masters of an

TESTEST

An. 1766. on the thirteenth, on hearing that the king was in full march to the relief of his capital. In their retreat.

an open city defended by a handful of men. But as foon as his majesty, informed of this invasion, flew to the asfiftance of his oppressed subjects, and approached the frontier only; all those troops of the enemy fled precipitately, and retired, some to Poland, and some to Saxony. It is not denied that they did hurt ; but the damage is not irreparable, and can have no influence on the future operations of the war. The diversion which the enemy proposed to make by it, far from favouring their affairs in Saxony, and Silefia, hath given the king an opportunity to reconquer the former, and to deliver the latter. Thus Haddick's enterprise against Berlin was followed in 1757, by the glorious victories of Rosbach and Liffa. The late expedition of the Russians and Austrians against Berlin hath ferved, notwithstanding all that hath been published, to ruin, without any reason, and without any end, fome thoufands of innocent subjects. But it hath displayed the enemies of Pruffia, in their true colours, to all Europe, and laid open the falfity, the injustice, and the cruelty of the principles on which they act, in this war. It should seem that the court of Vienna wanted to realife, on this occasion, the shocking expreffion of one of its generals, " That they must leave the fubjects of Brandenburgh only free air and the bare ground." Unable hitherto to crush the king, the magnanimous defender of the German liberties, it again hath recourse to those methods which the Ferdinands [of Auftria] employed in the last century, to reduce the whole empire under their despotic yoke. But its conduct in our days, it renews the fad remembrance of that long and bloody war which Germany then groaned under, for the space of thirty years. Let all Europe confider at present what it hath to expect from fuch an enemy. Let it judge whether the house of Austria, in case it could accomplish the depresfion of that of Brandenburgh, would not extend its ambitious views farther; and, to gain its end, feek to involve other states in the calamities in which it wants to plunge those of his majesty. But Providence, which hath already retreat, by different routes, from Brandenburg, Aq. 1760. they drove away all the cattle and horses they could find.

ready so often defeated the projects of this house, and which hath recently humbled its pride by the defeat at Torgau, will still fet fresh bounds to its ambition in the sequel of this war. We must hope that by its affiftance, the king will continue to defend himfelf successfully against the league formed against him by the infinuations and intrigues of the court of Vienna; and that all the efforts of his enemies will not prevent the most distant posterity from acknowledging him to have been the defender of the Protestant religion and the liberties of Germany.

The following is an Answer to the foregoing relation of the rawages committed by the Austrians, Russians, and Saxons, in Brandenburgh, published at Dresden, and reprinted in the Brussels Gagette.

The inhabitants of Berlin have been more frightened than hurt. As they had, by their acclamations and applauses, been accomplices in the excesses committed by their master in Saxony, they expected reprisals: but the generals of the two empreffes diffinguished themselves as much at Berlin, by their generofity and compassion, as those of Prussia in Saxony by their obdurateness and barbarity. Yet the Prussian Gazette hath the affurance to complain of a contribution of 1,800,000 crowns; of the plundering the arfenal, and the destruction of the powder-mill. The generals Lacy and Tottleben carried off the arms and uniforms that were in the king's magazines: they rendered unferviceable the royal foundery, which continually replaced in the enemy's armies the artillery which the imperial troops took from them at the price of their blood. The furniture of two country feats. the embellishments of which had been directed by the most rigorous œconomy, was damaged by the foldiers, who, in other respects, observed the exactest discipline. Compare these losses of the Prusfians with ours, and with those of the king-elector, whose august family, prisoners in their own palace, have feen the apartments of it broke open, the locks of the cabinets picked, their do-

An. 1760. find, ravaged the country, and committed brutal outrages on the inhabitants, which the pretence of retaliation could never excuse.

Critical fituation of the Pruffian monarch.

The body of Ruffians which entered Berlin. marched from thence into Poland, by the way of Furstenwalde, while the Austrians took the route of Saxony, from whence they had advanced into Brandenburg. Mean while the town of Wirtemberg, in that electorate, was reduced by the duke de Deux Ponts, commander of the imperial army, which, in conjunction with the Aumestics obliged to ransom themselves, their officers rob. bed, the finest furniture sold by auction for a trifle, their country-feats converted into hospitals and stables, till the rage of the Prussians reduced them to a heap of rubbish; the capital fet on fire and burnt; the gardens that furrounded it destroyed and dug up, from mere wantonness; the ornaments of them destroyed by express order of the king of Prussia; our arfenal, which contained only rich and curious pieces, carried to Berlin by an enemy whose destructive spirit is always subordinate to his avidity; the castles and estates of the ministers and principal nobility and gentry demolished and laid waste, after being feveral times ranfomed; the men carried off from the towns and villages, the houfes of the citizens plundered methodically, the magistrates thrown into dungeons, to compel them to deliver up the effects of the widow and the orphan; and to extort from the unfortunate inhabitants the little money they had hid from the Prussian tax-gather-

These are a part only of the diffresses which the generals of the empresses had to take vengeance for. their imperial majesties have too much magnanimity to make unhappy flaves answerable for what they did by the command of a despotic master. It is the royal house of Prussia that owes satisfaction to the powers it hath offended. Its subjects, perhaps, have been long wishing in their hearts, that they may take it complete in the treaty of peace.

ftrians,

firians, made themselves masters also of Tor- An. 1760:

gau and Leipfick.

The king of Prussia, in his march through Lusatia, was still attended by count Daun at the head of his grand army; and both paffed the Elbe about the latter end of October. The Pruffian croffed the river at Coswick, where he was joined by the troops under prince Eugene of Wirtemberg, and general Hulsen; so that his army now amounted to eighty thousand fighting men, with whom he refolved to strike fome stroke of importance. Indeed, at this time his fituation was truly critical. General Laudohn, with a confiderable body of Austrians, ramained in Silesia; the Russian army still threatened Breslau, the capital of that country. The Imperialists and Austrians had taken posfession of all the great towns in Saxony, and were mafters on both fides of the Elbe. In the eastern part of Pomerania the Russians had invefted Colberg by fea and land, feemingly determined to reduce the place, that they might have a fea-port, by which they could be fupplied with provision, ammunition, necessaries, and reinforcements, without the trouble and inconvenience of a long and laborious march from the banks of the Viftula.

On the western side of Pomerania, the war which had hitherto languished was renewed by the Swedes with uncommon vivacity. They passed the river Pene without opposition; and obliging general Stullerheim to retreat, advanced as far as Stransberg. That officer, however, be-

An. 1760. ing reinforced, attacked a Swedish post at Pasfelvalik, flew about five hundred of the enemy. and took an equal number, with fix pieces of cannon; but he was not numerous enough to keep the field against their whole army.

> Thus the Pruffian monarch faw himself obliged to abandon Silefia, deprived of all the places he held in Saxony, which had been his best refource; and in danger of being driven into his hereditary country of Brandenburg, which was unable either to maintain, or even to recruit his army.

He attacks the Auftrian army at Torgau.

On this emergency he resolved to make one desperate effort against the grand Austrian army, under count Daun, who had paffed the Elbe at Torgau, and advanced to Eulenburg, from whence, however, he retreated to his former camp at Torgau, and the king chose his situation between this last place and Schilda, at Lang-Reichenbach, where his huffars attacked a body of horse under general Brentano, and made four hundred prifoners. The right wing of the Austrians being at Groswich, and their left at Torgau, the Prusfian king determined to attack them next day. which was the third of November. His defign was to march through the wood of Torgau by three different routes, with thirty battalions and fifty foundrons of his left wing: the first line was ordered to advance by the way of Mackrene to Neiden; the second, by Peckhutte to Elsnick; and the third, confifting of cavalry, to penetrate by the wood of Wildehayn to Vogelsang.

On the other hand general Zeithen was directed An. 1760. to take the great Leipsick road, with thirty battalions and feventy foundrons of the right; and quitting it at the ponds of Torgau, to attack the villages of Suptitz and Grofwich. The king's line in its march, fell in with a corps of Austrians under general Reid, who retired into the wood of Torgau; and another more confiderable body, posted in the wood of Wildenhayn, likewise retreated to Groschutz, after having fired some pieces of artillery: but the dragoons of St. Ignon, being enclosed between two columns of Prussian infantry, were either killed or taken. By two in the afternoon the king had penetrated through the wood to the plain of Neiden, from whence anoanother body of the enemy retired to Torgau. where a continued noise of cannon and small arms declared, that general Zeithen was already engaged. The Prussians immediately advanced at a quicker pace, and passing the morasses near Neiden, inclined to the right in three lines, and foon came to action. Daun had chosen a very advantageous position: his right extended to Groswich, and his left to Zinne; while his infantry occupied some eminences along the road of Leiplick; and his front was strengthened with no less than two hundred pieces of cannon. His fecond line was disposed on an extent of ground, which terminated in hillocks towards the Elbe; and against this the king directed his attack.

An. 1760.

He had already given his troops to understand, that his affairs were in fuch a situation. they must either conquertor perish: and they began the battle with the most desperate impetuofity; but they met with fuch a warm reception from the artillery, fmall arms, and in particular from the Austrian carabineers, that their grenadiers were shattered and repulsed. The fecond charge, though enforced with incredible vigour, was equally unfuccessful: then the king ordered his cavalry to advance, and they fell upon fome regiments of infantry with fuch fury as obliged them to give way. These, however, were compelled to retire, in their turn, before about feventy battalions of the enemy, who advanced towards Torgau, stretching with their right to the Elbe, and their left to Zinne. While the prince of Holstein rallied his cavalry, and returned to the charge, the third line of Prussian infantry attacked the vineyard of Suptitz, and general Ziethen with the right wing took the enemy in rear. This disposition threw the Austrians into disorder. which was greatly augmented by the difafter of count Daun, who was dangerously wounded in the thigh, and carried off the field of battle. But the Pruffians could not pursue their victory, because the action had lasted until nine. and the night, being unufually dark, facilitated the retreat of the enemy, who croffed the Elbe on three bridges of boats, thrown over the river at Torgau.

The victor possessed the field of battle, with An. 1760. feven thousand prisoners, including two hundred officers, twenty-nine pair of colours, one standard, and about forty pieces of cannon. The carnage was very great on both fides: about three thousand Prussians were killed, and five thousand wounded; and, in the first attacks, two general officers, with fifteen hundred foldiers, were made prisoners by the enemy. The king, as usual, exposed his person in every part of the battle, and a musquet-ball grazed upon his breaft. In the morning the king of Prussia entered Torgau; then he secured Meissen, and took possession of Freyberg; so that, in consequence of this well-timed victory, his position was nearly the same as at the opening of the campaign. to and erruoveshing

The Austrians, however, notwithstanding this check, maintained their ground in the neighbourhood of Dresden; while the Prussians were distributed in quarters of cantonment in and about Leipsick and Meissen. As the Austrian general had, after the battle, recalled his detachments, general Laudohn abandoned Landshut, which again fell into the hands of the Prussians, and the Imperial army was obliged to retire into Franconia.

The Swedes, having penetrated a good way into Pomerania, returned again to their winter-quarters at Stralfund; and the Russian generals measured back their way to the Vistula: so that the confederates gained little else in the course of this campaign, but the contributions which they

Both armies go into quarters of cantonments

An. 1760. they raised in Berlin, and the open country of Brandenburg. Had all the allies been heartily bent upon crushing the Prussian monarch, one would imagine the Russians and Swedes might have joined their forces in Pomerania, and made good their winter-quarters in Brandenburg, where they could have been supplied with magazines from the Baltick, and been at hand to commence their operations in the fpring: but, in all probability, fuch an establishment in the empire would have given umbrage to the Germanic body.

The diets and Sweden affembled.

The diet of Poland being affembled in the of Poland beginning of October, the king entertained the most fanguine hope they would take some resolution in his favour; but the partisans of Prussia frustrated all his endeavours: one of the deputies protefting against holding a diet while there were foreign troops in the kingdom, the affembly broke up in a tumultuous manner, even before they had chosen a marechal.

> The diet of Sweden, which was convoked about the same period, seemed determined to proceed upon bufiness. They elected count Axel Ferson their grand marechal, in opposition to count Horn, by a great majority; which was an unlucky circumstance for the Prussian interest at Stockholm, inafmuch as the fame majority obstinately persisted in opinion, that the war should be profecuted in the spring with redoubled vigour, and the army in Germany reinforced to the number of at least thirty thousand fighting men.

This unfavourable circumstance made but little impression upon the Prussian monarch, who had maintained his ground with surprising resolution and success since the beginning of the campaign, and now enjoyed in prospect the benefit of winter, which he is said to have termed his best auxiliary.

The animolity which inflamed the contending parties was not confined to the operations in war; but broke out, as usual, in printed declarations, which the belligerant powers diffused all over Europe. In the beginning of the season the states of the circle of Westphalia had been required, by the Imperial court, to furnish their contingent of troops against the king of Prussia, or to commute for this contingent with a fum of money. In confequence of this demand, some of the Westphahan estates had fent deputies to confer with the affembly of the circle of Cologne; and to these the king fignified, by a declaration, dated at Munfter, that as this demand of money, instead of troops, was no less extraordinary than contrary to the constitutions of the empire, should they comply with it, or even continue to affift his enemies either with troops or money, he would confider them as having actually taken part in the war against him and his allies, and treat them accordingly on all occasions.

This intimation feems to have produced little effect in his favour. The duke of Mecklenbourg adhered to the opposite cause; and the elector of Cologne co-operated with the French in their defigns against Hanover. By way of retaliation for this partiality, the Prussians ravaged the country

NUMB. XXXIII.

Intimation given by the king of Pruffia to the states of the circle of Westphalia.

Various complaints exhibited to the diet at Ratisbon. An. 1760. of Mecklenbourg, and the Hanoverians levied contributions in the territories of Cologne. The parties thus aggrieved had recourse to complaints and remonstrances. The duke's envoy at Ratifbon communicated a rescript to the Imperial minifters, representing, that the Prussian troops under general Werner, and colonel de Belling, had diftreffed his country in the autumn by grievous extion given tortions; that afterwards prince Eugene of Wirtembourg, in the service of Prussia, had demanded 03 21 103 an exorbitant quantity of provisions, with some the fra es millions of money, and a great number of reedt for cruits; or, in lieu of thefe, that the duke's forces lo simila should act under the Prussian banner. He therefore declared, that as the country of Mecklenbourg was impoverished, and almost depopulated by these oppressions, the duke would find himself obliged to take measures for the future security of his subjects, if not immediately favoured with fuch affiftance from the court of Vienna as would put a ftop to these violent proceedings. This declaration was, by some, considered as the prelude of his renouncing his engagements with the house of Austria. As the Imperial court had threatened to put the elector of Hanover under the ban of the empire, in confequence of the hostilities which his troops had committed in the electorate of Cologne, his resident at Ratisbon delivered to the ministers who affifted at the diet a memorial, remonstrating, that the emperor hath no power, fingly, to fubject any prince to the ban, or declare him a rebel; and that, by arrogating fuch a power, he expoled his authority to the same contempt into which the pope's

Various complaints

Velipba-

exhibited to the diet at Ratisbon.

pope's bulls of excommunication were fo justly And 1760 fallen. With respect to the elector of Cologne, he observed, that this prince was the first who commenced hostilities, by allowing his troops to co-operate with the French in their invalion of Hanover, and by celebrating with rejoicings the advantages which they had gained in that electorate: he therefore gave the estates of the empire to understand, that the best way of screening their subjects from hostile treatment would be a strict observance of neutrality in the present disputes of the empire.

This was a strain much more effectual among Remonprinces and powers, who are generally actuated by ftrance interested motives, than was the repetition of complaints, equally pathetic and unavailing, uttered Poland. by the unfortunate king of Poland, elector of Saxony. The damage done to his capital by the last attempt of the Prussian monarch on that city, affected the old king in such a manner, that he published at Vienna an appeal to all the powers of Europe, from the cruelty and unprecedented outrages which diftinguished the conduct of his adversaries in Saxony*. All Europe pitied the hard fate

A memorial of the king of Poland, elector of Saxony. Published at Vienna, on the raising the siege of Dresden.

" Since the troubles began, that defolate Germany, his majesty the king of Poland, elector of Saxony, hath been too often obliged to make just complaints to his high allies, to the diet of the empire, and to all Europe. Stript of his hereditary dominions by a neighbour, who, on entering them, asked only a paffage through them, made protestations of friendship An. 1760. fate of this exiled prince, and sympathized with the difasters of his country: but, in the breasts of towards the fovereign, and declared he had no ground of complaint against him, nor any claim on the country; the king could not but look on the acts of hostility committed by the Prussians as so many injuries, as fo many breaches of the law of nations, and manifest violations of the laws of the empire. But things were foon carried to fuch a length, that Saxony would have thought herself too happy to find in the king of Prussia, not a depositary, but a declared enemy, provided this enemy would have respected the laws and customs of war, which humanity prescribes, and which all civilized nations have hitherto observed. She would not, in that case, have seen her towns subjected to contributions which exceed all meafure; the suburbs of the capital set on fire, without neceffity; the lands laid waste; and, what completes her miffortunes, her young men torn from her by force, and constrained to bear arms against their fovereign: horrid treatment! and fo opposite to humanity, that it is without example, not among civilized nations only, but even among the greatest barbarians.

Sunk under fuch grievous oppressions, Saxony seemed to have no room to fear that her condition could be worfe. Nevertheless, she hath found within the space of the last year, that fresh misfortunes were in referve for her; and that, if the Prussians seemed for some time to preserve the country, it was only that they themselves might enjoy its produce. This tenderness was not dictated by humanity, but by interest. As the danger of being expelled Saxony increased, they displayed their cruelty. If they quitted any part of the country without hope of returning, they gave it up to pillage: wherever they came, the unhappy peafant was plundered without mercy; grain, forage, horses, cattle of all kinds, were taken from him; and he was left without subsistence. Whole families, and the best workmen of all forts, were carried off: even women found no fafeguard in their fex; but all who were thought useful for Brandenburgh were torn from their families, and carried into flavery.

The city of Drefden remained. Notwithstanding the ruin of its suburbs, it still maintained a numerous peohis enemies, reasons of state and convenience over- An. 1760. ruled the fuggestions of humanity; and his friends had

ple; it was the resource of the neighbouring country. To complete the ruin of Saxony, the unfortunate city was to be destroyed. Had the enemy attacked the place according to the rules and cuftoms of war, had they directed their efforts against the ramparts, the king would, without doubt, have lamented the evils that would have resulted from it to his people; but he would have lamented them without complaining: and though in the fiercest wars the refidences of fovereigns have hitherto been generally fpared, his majesty would have been filent; for, in short, one is accustomed to consider the king of Prussia not as an ordinary enemy: but the Pruffians made war on the innocent townsmen: their fire was wholly directed against the houses; and they endeavoured to destroy a town which they could not take.

The king cannot forbear pointing out to all Europe this remarkable circumstance, that the enemy redoubled their fire against the houses in Dresden, and did them the greatest damage, when the arrival of M. Daun, with his whole army, left them no hope of being able to take the place; and, in short, that in drawing off their men from the suburbs before Wilfdruff-gate, they laid in ashes upwards of an hundred houses that had escaped in the preceding fires. The king of Prussia succeeded in completing the misfortunes of Saxony by the disasters that befel the capital. Three hundred and fifty houses destroyed. with all that was in them, and a great many others half ruined, are a fatal loss to a city already exhausted by four fuccessive years of misfortunes. After thefe things, the king thinks it fcarce worth while to mention his palaces and his gardens, which were facked and ruined, in contempt of the regard usually paid from one fovereign to another. Is there a man in the empire, or even in all Europe, who doth not fee in these terrible effects an implacable hatred, and a destructive fury, which all nations ought to concur in repreffing?

It is not to render his enemy odious, that the king holds up this picture to all the powers in Europe, and par-

An. 1760. had hitherto exerted themselves in vain for the deliverance of his people.

From this detail of continental affairs, our attention is recalled to Great Britain, by an incident particularly to his co-estates, and his high allies; but in hopes of exciting them to redouble their efforts, without delay, for the deliverance of Saxony, and not fuffer that unfortunate country to be absolutely ruined; to move their compassion in favour of an innocent people, reduced to the utmost distress, and who can expect but a very teeble affiftance from their fovereign, ftript himself of all things by acts of oppreffion, no less violent than unforeseen.

This inability is of all his majesty's misfortunes the most fevere. He loves his people. He hath a father's bowels for them; and he fees them overwhelmed with distress, without being able to fuccour them. The king hath the confolation left of employing, in their favour, all that the goodness of his cause, his invariable love of justice, and the great facrifices he hath made for the common advantage, and the preservation of the empire; in short, all the regard and attention that he may merit by his misfortunes from the friendly powers. By all these titles he conjures those powers to take the properest measures for the relief and preservation of the subjects lest him in Saxony.

As to what regards him personally, his majesty puts his whole trust in the sovereign master of kings, in that judge who searcheth the heart, and weigheth right in the scales of justice. He is encouraged to hope that he will, in the end, be pleased to enable him to dry up the tears of the Saxons, to guard them for the suture from all external violence, and to ensure their domestic happiness by paternal government.

His conscience beareth him this precious witness, that he hath not drawn so many evils upon himself and his dominions by unjust or ambitious enterprizes. The justice of his cause is so evident, so incontestible, and even so fully acknowledged by every one, that he cannot be refused an indemnisication proportioned to his losses, if in the suture pacification any regard be paid to justice and of a very interesting nature; an account of which, An. 176. however, we shall postpone until we have recorded the fuccess that in the course of this year attended the British arms in the East Indies. . We have already observed, that colonel Coote, after having defeated the French general Lally in the field, and reduced divers of the enemy's fettlements on the coast of Coromandel, at length cooped them up within the walls of Pondicherry, the principal feat of the French East India company, large, populous, well fortified, and fecured with a numerous garrison, under the immediate command of their general. In the month of October admiral Ste- Reduction vens failed from Trincamaley with all his fquadron, in order to its being refitted, except five fail of the line, which he left under the command of Indies. captain Haldane to block up Pondicherry by fea, while Mr. Coote should carry on his operations by land. By this disposition, and the vigilance of the British officers, the place was so hampered as to be greatly diffressed for want of provisions, even before the fiege could be undertaken in form; for the rainy feafon rendered all regular approaches impracticable. These rains being abated by the twenty-fixth day of November, colonel Coote directed the engineers to pitch upon proper places for erecting batteries, that should enfilade or flank the works of the garrison, without exposing their own men to any severe fire from the enemy. Accordingly four batteries were constructed in dif-, ferent places, fo as to answer these purposes, and opened altogether on the eighth day of December at midnight. Though raifed at a confiderable dif-

equity,"

of Pondicherry in the East

An. 1760.

tance, they were plied with good effect, and the besieged returned the fire with great vivacity. This mutual cannonading continued until the twenty-ninth day of the month, when the engineers were employed in raising another battery near enough to effect a breach in the north-west counterguard and curtain. Though the approaches were retarded some days by a violent florm, which almost ruined the works, the damage was foon repaired: a confiderable post was taken from the enemy by affault, and afterwards regained by the French grenadiers, through the timidity of the Sipoys, by whom it was occupied. By the fifteenth day of January, a fecond battery being raifed within point-blank, a breach was made in the curtain: the west face and flank of the north-west bastion were ruined, and the guns of the enemy intirely filenced.

The garrison and inhabitants of Pondicherry were now reduced to an extremity of famine which would admit of no hesitation. General Lally sent a colonel, attended by the chief of the Jesuits and two civilians, to Mr. Coote, with proposals of surrendering * the garrison prisoners of war, and demanding a capi-

The taking of Chandernagore, contrary to the faith of treaties, and of that neutrality which has always subsisted between all European nations, and namely between the two nations in this part of India; and that immediately after a fignal fervice which the French nation had rendered the English, not only in taking no part against them with the Nabob of Bengal, but in receiving them in their [•] Translation of Mr. Lally's proposals for the delivery of the garrison.

10003

capitulation in behalf of the French East India An. 1760. company. On this last subject he made no reply;

their fettlements, to give them time to recover from their first losses (as appears by the letters of thanks from Mr. Pigot himself, and from the council of Madras to that of Pondicherry) added to the formal refusal of fulfilling the conditions of a cartel, agreed upon between our respective masters, though it was at first accepted by Mr. Pigot, and the commissaries were named on both fides to go to Sadraft, to fettle amicably the difficulties which might occur in its execution, put it out of my power, with refpect to my court, to make or propose to Mr. Coote any capitulations for the town of Pondicherry.

The king's troops, and those of the company, surrender themselves, for want of provisions, prisoners of war of his Britannic majesty, upon the terms of the cartel, which I reclaim equally for all the inhabitants of Pondicherry, as well as for the exercise of the Roman religion, the religious houses, hospitals, surgeons, chaplains, servants, &c. referring myself to the decision of our two courts, for reparation proportioned to the violation of fo folemn a treaty.

Accordingly Mr. Coote may take possession to-morrow morning at eight o'clock, of the gate of Villenour; and after to-morrow at the same hour, of that of Fort St. Louis; and as he has the power in his own hands, he will dictate such ulterior dispositions to be made as he shall judge proper.

I demand, merely from a principle of justice and humanity, that the mother and fifters of Reza Saib, be permitted to feek an afylum where they please, or that they remain prisoners among the English, and be not delivered up into Mahomet Ally Cawn's hands, which are still red with the blood of the husband and father, that he has spilt, to the shame indeed of those who gave them up to him; but not less to the shame of the commander of the English army, who should not have allowed fuch a piece of barbarity to be committed in his camp.

As I am tied up by the cartel in the declaration which I make to Mr. Coote.

1 con-

An 1760 ply; but next morning took possession of the town and citadel, where he found a great quantity

I consent that the gentlemen of the council of Pondicherry may make their own representations to him, with regard to what may more immediately concern their own private interests, as well as the interest of the inhabitants of the colony. Done at Fort Louis off Pondicherry, the 15th day of January 1761.

Signed, Lally.

To colonel Coote, commander in chief of his Britannic majesty's forces before Pondicherry.

A true copy.

Francis Rowland, Sec.

Colonel Coote's answers to M.

Lally's proposals.

The particulars of the capture of Chandernagore having been long fince transmitted to his Britannic majesty, by the officer to whom that place furrendered, colonel Coote cannot take cognizance of what passed on that occasion; nor can he admit the same as any way relative to the surrender of Pondicherry.

The disputes which have arisen concerning the cartel concluded between their Britannic and most Christian majesties, being as yet undecided, colonel Coote has it not in his power to admit, That the troops of his most Christian majesty, and those of the French East India company, shall be deemed prisoners of war to his Britannic majesty, upon the terms of that cartel; but requires that they furrender themselves prisoners of war. to be used as he shall think confiftent with the interests of the king his master. And colonel Coote will shew all fuch indulgences as are agreeable to humanity.

Colonel Coote will fend the grenadiers of his regiment, between the hours of eight and nine o'clock tomorrow morning, to take possession of the Villenourgate; and the next morning, between the same hours, he will also take possession of the gate of Fort St. Louis.

The mother and fifters of Reza Saib shall be escorted to Madrass, where proper care shall be taken for their safety: and they shall not on any account be delivered into the hands of Nabob Mahomet Ally Cawn. Given tity of artillery, ammunition, small arms, and An. 1760.

military stores; then he secured the garrison, amount-

at the head-quarters at the camp before Pondicherry, this 15th of January 1761.

Signed, Eyre Coote.
To Arthur Lally, Efq; lieutenant-general and commander in chief of his most Christian majesty's forces in India, at Pondicherry.

A true copy. Francis Rowland, Sec.

Articles proposed to colonel Coote by the chief of the Jesuits; to which no answer was returned.

The superior council of Pondicherry, authorized by the count de Lally, lieutenant-general of the armies of his most Christian majesty, and his commissary in India, to treat for the said town and its inhabitants, present the following articles to colonel Coote, commander of his Britannic majesty's troops on the coast of Coromandel.

Art. I. Upon the reduction of the place, its inhabitants shall not in any wife be injured; their houses shall be preserved, and they shall retain all their effects and merchandize, with liberty of choice to convey them where-ever they shall think proper, or to continue their dwelling in the said town, as new subjects of his Britannic majesty; and they shall be treated as the old subjects have usually been treated; accordingly, those who have heretofore had possessions or advantages, shall not be deprived of them.

II. They shall be maintained in the exercise of the Roman Catholic religion, in the same manner as has been practifed under the French government. The churches and the houses of the ecclefiaftics and religious persons shall be preserved, together with every thing thereanto belonging, whether they be fituated without or within the town. The missionaries shall have liberty of passing from place to place, and shall find, under the English flag, the fame protection as under the French flag.

III. Not only the buildings and houses belonging to private persons, whether laymen, ecclesiastics, or religious persons, shall be lest in the condition they are, but also the buildings belonging to the company, as well as the fort, the warehouses,

An, 1760.

amounting to above two thousand Europeans. Lally made a gallant defence, and had he been properly supplied with provision, the conquest of the place would not have been so easily atchieved. He certainly slattered himself with the hope of being supplied; otherwise an officer of his experience would have demanded a capitulation before he was reduced to the necessity of acquiescing in any terms the besieger might have thought proper to impose. That he spared no pains to procure supplies, appears from an intercepted letter houses, and the walls of the town, with all the fortifications, until the date of these last, that is to say, every thing of this kind, belonging to the company, shall be decided by the two respective courts.

IV. The papers of the registry and notary office, on which depend the fortunes of the inhabitants, shall be sent to France, without any obstacle, by such conveyances as they shall think sit, who are now charged with them, and in whose possession they shall, in the mean time, remain.

V. The treatment, herein before stipulated by the first article, for the inhabitants of Pondicherry, shall be extended to all the members of the council, company's agents, officers settled in the same town, and all others, who have been, or now are, in the fervice of the company; and so in like manner to the merchants, whether Armenians, or of any other nation, settled heretofore in Pondicherry for their trade.

VI. The creoles, or natives of Mauritius and of Bourbon, amounting in number to forty-one, including five officers, as well those who are in health, as those who have been wounded, or are invalids, having served as volunteers, and not being soldiers, should have the liberty of returning to their home by the first good opportunity they may find.

VII. Safe-guards shall be granted to prevent disorder.

VIII. All the foregoing articles shall be executed according to good faith.

A true copy.

Francis Rowland, Sec.

written

written by this commander to Monsieur Raymond, An. 1760. French refident at Pullicat .-- The billet is no bad Retch of the writer's character, which feems to have a strong tincture of oddity and extravagance.

" Monsieur Raymond,-- the English squadron is no more. Sir -- of the twelve ships they had in our road, seven are loft, crews and all; the other four dismasted; and no more than one frigate hath escaped-therefore lose not an instant in sending chelingoes upon chelingoes, loaded with rice-- The Dutch have nothing to fear now. Besides, according to the law of nations, they are only restricted from sending us provisions in their own bottoms; and we are no longer blockaded by fea--- The salvation of Pondicherry hath been once in your power already: if you neglect this opportunity it will be intirely your own faultdon't forget some small chelingoes also-offer great rewards--in four days I expect seventeen thousand Morattoes. -- In short, risque all-attempt allforce all, and fend us fome rice, should it be but half a garfe at a time."

By the reduction of Pondicherry the French in- Part of terest was annihilated on the coast of Coromandel, the Briand therefore of the utmost importance to the dron British nation. It may be doubted, however, wrecked whether colonel Coote, with all his spirit, vigilance, and military talents, could have succeeded in this enterprize, without the affiftance of the fquadron, which co-operated with him by fea, and effectually excluded all fuccour from the belieged. It must be owned, for the honour of the service. that no incident interrupted the good understandtifh fqua-

An. 1760, ing which was maintained between the land and fea officers, who vied with each other in contributing their utmost efforts towards the success of the expedition. On the twenty-fifth day of December rear-admiral Steevens arrived with four ships of the line, having parted with rear-admiral Cornish and his division in stormy weather: but he joined them at Pondicherry before the place was furrendered .-- On the first day of January a violent tempest obliged admiral Steevens to slip his cables and put to fea, where he parted with the rest of his squadron; and when in three days he returned to the road of Pondicherry, he had the mortification to find that his division had fuffered severely from the storm. The ships of war called the Duke of Aquitaine and the Sunderland foundered in the storm, and their crews perished. The Newcastle, the Queenborough, and Protector fireship, were driven on shore and destroyed; but the men were faved, together with the cannon. stores, and provisions. Many other ships sustained confiderable damage, which, however, was foon repaired. Admiral Steevens having intercepted the letter inferted above from Lally to Raymond, immediately dispatched letters to the Dutch and Danish settlements on this coast, intimating, that notwithstanding the infinuations of general Lally, he had eleven fail of the line, with two frigates. under his command, all fit for fervice, in the road of Pondicherry, which was closely invested and blockaded both by fea and land. He therefore declared, that as in that case it was contrary to the law of nations for any neutral power to relieve or succour the besieged, he was determined to An. 1760. feize any veffel that should attempt to throw provisions into the place.

While the arms of Great Britain still prospered Death of in every effort tending to the real interest of the II. king nation, an event happened which, for a moment, of Engobfured the splendour of her triumphs; and could land. not but be very alarming to those G-n allies. whom her liberality had enabled to maintain an expensive and sanguinary war of humour and ambition. On the twenty-fifth day of October, George II. king of Great Britain, without any previous diforder, was in the morning fuddenly feized with the agony of death, at the palace at Kenfington. He had rifen. at his usual hour, drank his chocolate, and inquired about the wind, as anxious for the arrival of the foreign mails; then he opened a window of his apartment, and perceiving the weather was ferene, declared he would walk in the garden. In a few minutes after this declaration, while he remained alone in his chamber, he fell down upon the floor: the noise of his fall brought his attendants into the room, who lifted him on the bed, where he defired in a faint voice that the princess Amelia might be called; but before the could reach the apartment he had expired. An attempt was made to bleed him, but without effect; and indeed his malady was far beyond the reach of art; for when the cavity of the thorax or cheft was opened, and inspected by the serieant furgeons, they found the right ventricle of the heart actually ruptured, and a great quantity of blood discharged through the aperture into the furroundappron Th of that prince.

George

An. 1760. furrounding pericardium; fo that he must have died instantaneously in consequence of the effu-The case however was so extraordinary, that we question whether there is such another instance upon record .-- A rupture of this nature appears the more remarkable, as it happened to a prince of a healthy constitution, unaccustomed to excess, and far advanced beyond that period of life when the blood might be supposed to flow with a dangerous impetuofity.

Character of that prince.

Thus died George II. at the age of feventyfeven, after a long reign of thirty four years, distinguished by a variety of important events, and checquered with a viciflitude of character and fortune. He was in his person rather lower than the middle fize, well fhaped, erect, with eyes remarkably prominent, a high nofe, and fair complexion. In his disposition he is faid to have been hafty, prone to anger, especially in his youth, yet foon appealed; otherwise mild, moderate, and humane: in his way of living temperate, regular, and fo methodical in every branch of private economy, that his attention descended to objects which a great king (perhaps) had better overlook. He was fond of military pomp and parade; and perfonally brave. He loved war as a foldier; he fludied it as a science; and corresponded on this subject with some of the greatest officers whom Germany has produced. The extent of his understanding, and the splendour of his virtue, we shall not presume to ascertain, nor attempt to display; we rather wish for opportunities to expatiate on his munificence and liberality; his generous nerous regard to genius and learning; his royal Am 1760. encouragement and protection of those arts by which a nation is at once benefited and adorned. With relipect to his government, it very feldom deviated from the institutions of law; or encroached upon private property; or interfered with the common administration of justice. The circumstances that chiefly marked his public charace ter, were a predilection for his native country, and a close attention to the political interests of the Germanic body: points and principles to which he adhered with the most invincible fortitude; and, if ever the blood and treasure of Great Britain were facrificed to these considerations, we ought not fo much to blame the prince who acted from the dictates of natural affection. as we should detest a succession of ve-- m----rs. all of whom in their turns devoted themselves foul and body, to the gratification of this paffion, or partiality, so prejudicial to the true interest of their country.

The reign of George II. produced many revo- Recapitulutions, as well in the internal schemes of œcono- lation of my and administration, as in the external projects of political connexions; revolutions that expeled events of the frailties of human nature, and demonstrated his reign. the inftability of fystems founded upon convenience. In the course of this reign a standing army was, by dint of ministerial influence, ingrafted on the conflictution of Great Britain. A fatal stroke was given to the liberty of the press, by the act subjecting all dramatic writings to the inspection of a licenser. The great machine of

Numb. 33.

the prin-

cor-

An 1760 corruption, contrived to secure a constant majority in p-t, was overturned, and the inventor of it obliged to quit the reins of government. Professed patriots resigned the principles which they had long endeavoured to establish, and lifted themselves for the defence of that fortress against which their zeal and talents had been levelled. The management of a mighty kingdom was configned into the hands of a motley administration, ministers without knowledge, and men without integrity, whose councils were timid, weak, and wavering; whose folly and extravagance expo'ed the nation to ridicule and contempt; by whose ignorance and presumption it was reduced to the verge of ruin. The kingdom was engaged in a quarrel truly national, and rommenced a neceffary war on national principles; but that war was starved, and the chief strength of the nation transferred to the continent of Europe, in order to maintain an unnecessary war, in favour of a family whose pride and ambition can be equalled by nothing but its infolence and ingratitude. Recapitite While the strength of the nation was thus exerted the prinabroad for the support of worthless allies, and a dangerous rebellion raged in the bowels of the kingdom, the f-n was infulted by his m-rs, who deferted his fervice at that critical juncture, and refused to resume their functions, until he had truckled to their petulant humour, and difmiffed a favourite servant, of whose superior talents they were meanly jealous. Such an unprecedented fecession at any time would have merited the imputation of infolence; but at that period, when when their f-n was perplexed and embarraffed An. 1769. by a variety of dangers and difficulties; when his crown, and even his life, was at stake, to throw up their places, abandon his councils, and as far as in them lay, detach themselves from his fortune; was a step so likely to aggravate the diforder of the nation; to big with cruelty, ingratitude, and f-n, that it feems to deserve an appellation which, however, we do not think proper to bestow. An inglorious war was succeeded by an ignominious p---ce, which proved of shore duration; yet in this interval the English nation. exhibited fuch a proof of commercial opulence, as aftonished all Europe. At the close of a war which had drained it of so much treasure, and increased the public debt to an enormous burden, it acquiesced under such a reduction of interest as one would hardly think the ministry durst have proposed, even before one half of the national debt was contracted.

A much more unpopular step was a law that passed for naturalizing the Jews; a law so odious to the people in general, that it was soon repealed, at the request of that m—r by whom it had been chiefly patronized. An ill-concerted peace was in a little time productive of fresh holdlities and another war with France, which Britain began to prosecute under unfavourable auspices. Then the whole political system of G—y was inverted. The k— of E—d abandoned the interest of that house which he had in the former war so warmly espoused, and took into his bosom a p—e whom he had formerly considered as his inveterate

An. 1760. enemy. The unpropitious beginning of this war against France being imputed to the misconduct of the ad____n, excited fuch a ferment among the people as feemed to threaten a dangerous infurrection. Every part of the kingdom resounded with the voice of diffatisfaction, which did not even respect the throne. The k-g found himself obliged to accept of a m-r prefented by the people, and this measure was attended with confequences as favourable as his wish could form. From that instant all clamour was hushed; all opposition ceased. The enterprising spirit of the new minister seemed to diffuse itself through all the operations of the war; and conquest every where attended the efforts of the British arms. Now appeared the fallacy of those maxims, and the falshood of those affertions, by which former ministers had established and endeavoured to excuse the practices of c-n. The supposed difaffection, which had been infifted on as the fource of parliamentary opposition, now intirely vanished; nor was it found necessary to use finister means for fecuring a majority, in order to answer the purposes of the administration. England, for the first time, faw a minister of state in full possession of popularity; the faithful servant of the crown, the universal darling of the people. Under the aufpices of this minister, it saw a national militia formed, and trained to discipline, by the invincible fpirit of a few patriots, who purfued this falutary measure in the face of unwearied opposition, difcouraged by the jealousy of a c-t, and ridiculed by all the venal retainers to a standing army. Under his auspices it saw the military genius of Great An. 1760. Britain revive, and shine with redoubled lustre; it faw her interest and glory coincide, and an immense extent of country added by conquest to her dominions. The people, confiding in the integrity and abilities of their own minister, and elevated by the repeated founds of triumph, became enamoured of the war, and granted fuch liberal fubfidies for its support, as no other minister would have prefumed to ask, as no other nation believed they could afford. Nor did they murmur at feeing great part of their treasure diverted into foreign channels; nor did they feem to bestow a serious thought on the accumulating load of the national debt, which already exceeded the immense sum of one hundred millions.

der

In a word, they were intoxicated with victory; His death and as the king happened to die in the midst of universaltheir transports, occasioned by the final conquest ly lamentof Canada, their good humour garnished his character with a prodigality of encomiums. A thousand pens were drawn to paint the beauties and fublimity of his character, in poetry as well as profe. They extolled him above Alexander in courage and heroifm, above Augustus in liberality, Titus in clemency, Antoninus in piety and benevolence, Solomon in wisdom, and St. Louis in devotion. Such hyperbolical eulogiums ferve only to throw a ridicule upon a character, which may be otherwise respectable. The two universities vied with each other in lamenting his death, and each published a huge collection of elegies on the subject : nor did they fail to exalt his praise, with the warmest expressions of affection H 3

An. 1760.

His death

ly lament-

affection and regret, in the compliments of condolance and congratulation which they presented to his fuccessor. The same panegyric and pathos appeared in all the addresses, with which every other community in the kingdom approached the throne of our present sovereign; insomuch that we may venture to fay, no prince was ever more popular at the time of his decease. The English are naturally warm and impetuous; and, in generous natures, affection is as apt as any other passion to run riot. The fudden death of the king was las mented as a national misfortune by many, who felt a truly filial affection for their country not that they implicitly subscribed to all the exagges rated praise which had been so liberally poured forth on his character; but because the nation was deprived of him at a critical juncture, while in--inview volved in a dangerous and expensive war, of which he had been personally the chief mover and support. They knew the burden of royalty devolved upon a young prince, who, though heir apparent to the crown, and already arrived at the years of maturity, had never been admitted to any share of the administration, nor made acquainted with any schemes or secrets of state. The real character of the new king was very little known to the generality of the nation. They dreaded an abrupt change of measures, which might have rendered useless all the advantages obtained in the course of the war. As they were ignorant of his connexions, they dreaded a revolution in the ministry, which might fill the kingdom with clamour and confution. But the greatest shock occasioned by his decease low-subjects in Germany, who saw themselves suddenly deprived of their sole prop and patron, at a time when they could not pretend, of themselves, to make head against the numerous enemies by whom they were surrounded. But all these doubts and apprehensions vanished like mist before the rising suns and the people of Great Britain enjoyed the inexpressible pleasure of seeing their loss repaired in such a manner, as must have amply sulfilled the most sanguine with of every friend to his country who have a most sanguine with of every friend to his country or based on the sanguine with of every friend to his country or based on the sanguine with of every friend to his

The commerce of Great Britain continued to increase during the whole course of this reign; but this increase was not the effect of extraordinary encouragement. On the contrary, the necessities of governments the growing expences of the nation, and the continual augmentation of the public debt, obliged the legislature to hamper trade with manifold and grievous impositions : its increase, therefore, must have been owing to the natural progress of industry and adventure, extending themselves to that farthest line or limit beyond which they will not be able to advance: when the tide of traffick has flowed to its highest mark, it will then begin to recede in a gradual ebb. until it is farunk within the narrow limits of its original channel War, which naturally impedes the traffick of other nations, has opened new fources to the merchants of Great Britain: the superiority of her naval power hath crushed the navigation of France, her great rival in commerce; fo that the now topplies; on her town

H 4

.71

Account of the commerce of Great Britain,

> State of religion and philefophy.

terms.

An. 1760.

terms, all those foreign markets at which in time of peace the was underfold by that dangerous competitor. Thus her trade is augmented to a furprifing pitch; and this great augmentation alone has enabled her to maintain the war at fuch an enormous expence. As this advantage will ceafe when the French are at liberty to re-establish their commerce, and profecute it without molestation, it would be for the interest of Great Britain to be at continual variance with that restless neighbour, provided the contest could be limited to the operations of a fea-war, in which England would be always invincible and victorious. Foreign nations will doubtless be surprised to learn, that above eight thousand thips are employed by the traders of Great Britain; and that the produce of the finking fund, which is the overplus produced by all , the different funds appropriated to defray the interest of the national debt, exceeds annually three with manifold and grievous impenified anoillim

State of religion and philesophy.

off the

merce of

Great Britain.

> The powers of the human mind were freely and fully exercised in this reign. Confiderable progress was made in mathematics and astronomy by divers individuals; among whom we number Sanderfon, Bradley Maclauring Smith, and the two mark, it will then begin to recede in anotheris

> 10 Natural philosophy became a general fludy, and the new doctrine of electricity grew into fallrion. Different methods were discovered for tendering lea-water porable and fweet ; and divers uferd hints were communicated to the public by the learned doctor Stephen Hale, who directed all his refearthes and experiments to the benefit of forerms.

ciety.

ciety. The fludy of alchemy no longer prevailed; Am 1760. but the art of chemistry was perfectly understood, and affiduously applied to the purposes of sophistitheir defluines to the most remote corners moits

The clergy of Great Britain were generally learned, pious, and exemplary. Sherlock, Hoadley, Secker, and Conybeare, were promoted to the first dignities of the church. Warburton, who had long fignalized himfelf by the ftrength and boldness of his genius, his extensive capacity, and profound erudition, at length obtained the mitre. But these promotions were granted to reasons of state convenience, and personal interest, rather than as rewards of extraordinary merit. Many other ecclefiaftics of worth and learning were totally overlooked. Nor was ecclefiaftical merit confined to the established church Many inflances of extraordinary gentus, unaffected piety, and universal moderation, appeared among the diffenting ministers of Great Britain and Ireland among these we particularize the elegant, the prize mitive Fofter; the learned, ingenious, and penel ainneh as he affirmed among them Brail gritari

The progress of reason, and free cultivation of Fanatithe human mind, had not however intirely bas cifin. nished those ridiculous feets and schisms of which the kingdom had been formerly fo productive. Imposture and fanaticism fall hung upon the skirts of religion. Weak minds were feduced by the delutions of a superstition stiled Methodism, raised upon the affectation of superior sanctity, and maintained by pretentions to divine illumination. Many thousands in the lower ranks of life were infected

with

An. 1760.

with this species of enthusiasm, by the unwearied endeavours of a few obscure preachers; such as White and the two Wittens, who propagated their doctrines to the most remote corners of the British dominions, and found means to lay the whole kingdom under contribution.

o Fanaticism also formed a league with false philosophy. One Hutchinson, a visionary, intoxicated with the fumes of Rabbinical learning, pretended to deduce all demonstration from Hebrew toots, and to confine all human knowledge to the five books of Moses. His disciples became numerous after his death with the methodists, they denied the merit of good works; and bitterly inveightd against Newton as an ignorant pretender, who had prefumed to let up his own ridiculous chimæras in opposition to the facred philofophy of the Pentateuch. But the most extraordinary left which diftinguished this reign was that of the Moravians, or Hernhutters, imported from Germany by count Zinzendorf, who might have been termed the Melchizedec of his followers, inasmuch as he assumed among them the three-fold character; of prophet, priest, and king, They could not be to properly filed a fect as the disciples of an original, who had invented a new fystem of religion. Their chief adoration was payed to the Second Person in the Trinity: the First they treated with the most shocking neglect. Some of their tenets were bling -s, fome indecent, and others ridiculously absurd. Their discipline was a ftrange mixture of devotion and impurity. Their exterior worship consisted of hymns, prayers, and ferdaive fermons: the hymns extremely ludicrous, and At. 1760. often indecent, alluding to the fide hole or wound which Christ received from a spear in his side, while he remained upon the crofs. Their fermons frequently contained very gross incentives to the work of propagation. Their private exercises are faid to have abounded with fuch rites and myftes ries as we cannot explain, with any regard to decorum. They professed a community of goods a and were governed as one family, in temporals as well as spirituals, by a council, or kind of presbytery, in which the count, as their ordinary, prefided. In cases of doubt, or great confequence, these pretended to confult the Saviour, and to decide from immediate inspiration; so that they boasted of being under the immediate direction of a Theocracy; though, in fact, they were flaves to the most dangerous kind of despotism: for as often as any individual of the community prefumed to think for himself, or differ in opinion from the ordinary and his band of affociates, the oracle decreed, that he should be instantly fent upon the mission which they had fixed in Greenland, or to the colony they had established in Pensylvania. As these religionists consisted chiefly of manufact turers, who appeared very fober, orderly, and industrious; and their chief declared his intention of profecuting works of public emolument, they obtained a fettlement under a parliamentary fanction in England, where they foon made a confiderable number of profelytes, before their principles were fully discovered and explained come to exert his ingentity, not in building his work

Fanaticifin.

How well.

Meraphy-

ties and, Medicine.

Agricul-

.onus

Many

Ap 3766. Metaphyfics and Medicine.

Many ingenious treatifes on metaphyfics and morality appeared in the course of this reign; and a philosophical spirit of inquiry diffused itself to the farthest extremities of the united kingdom. Tho' few discoveries of importance were made in medicine. vet that art was well understood in all its different branches; and many of its professors distinguished themselves in other provinces of literature. Befides the medical effavs of London and Edinburgh, the physician's library was enriched with many uleful modern productions; with the works of the claffical Friend, the elegant Mead; the accurate Huxham, and the philosophical Pringle. The art of midwifery was elucidated by science, reduced to fixed principles, and almost wholly configned into the hands of men practitioners. The refearches of anatomy were profecuted to fome curious discoveries by the ingenuity and dexterity of a Hunter and a Monro. The numerous hospitals in London contributed to the improvement of furgery, which was brought to perfection under the auspices of a Cheselden and a Sharpen The advantages of agriculture, which had long flourished in England, extended themfelves gradually to the most remote and barren provinces of the ifland, av baseage odw parent

Agricul-

Mecha-

The mechanic powers were well understood, and judiciously applied to many useful machines of necessity and convenience. The mechanical arts had attained to all that perfection which they were dapable of acquiring v but the avarice and oppression of contractors, obliged the handicraftsman to exert his ingenuity, not in finishing his work well.

well, but in affording it cheap; in purchasing Am 1760. bad materials, and performing his talk in a hurry; in concealing flaws, substituting shew for folidity, and facrificing reputation to the thirst of lucre. Thus many of the English manufactures, being found flight and unserviceable, grew into discredit abroad; thus the art of producing them more perfect, may in time be totally loft at home. The cloths now made in England, are inferior in texture and fabric to those which were manufactured in the beginning of the century; and the fame judgment may be pronounced upon almost every article of hardware. The razors, knives, scissars, hatchets, swords, and other edge-utenfils, prepared for exportation, are generally ill-tempered, half finished, flawed of brittle; and the mulquets, which are fold for feven or eight shillings a piece to the exporter, fo carelefly and unconscientiously prepared, they cannot be used without imminent danger of mutilation; accordingly one hardly meets with a negro man upon the coast of Guinea, in the neighbourhood of the British settlements, who has not been wounded or maimed in fome member. by the burfting of the English fire-arms. The advantages of this traffic, carried on at the expence of character and humanity, will naturally cease whenever those Africans can be supplied more honeftly by the traders of any other nation.

Genius in writing spontaneously arose, and Genius. though neglected by the great, flourished under the culture of a public which had pretentions to tafte, and piqued itself on encouraging literary

An. 1760. merit. Swift and Pope we have mentioned on another occasion. Young still survived a venerable monument of poetical talent. Thomson, the poet of the Seasons, displayed a luxuriancy of genius in describing the beauties of nature. Akenfide and Armstrong excelled in didactic poetry. Even the Epopæa did not disdain an English dress. but appeared to advantage in the Leonidas of Glover, and the Epigoniad of Wilkie. The public acknowledged a confiderable share of dramatic merit in the tragedies of Young, Mallet, Home, and some other less distinguished authors. Very few regular comedies, during this period, were exhibited on the English theatre, which, however, produced many less laboured pieces. abounding with fatire, wit, and humour. The Careless Husband of Cibber, and Suspicious Husband of Hoadley, are the only very modern comedies that bid fair for reaching potterity. The exhibitions of the stage were improved to the most exquisite entertainment, by the talents and management of Garrick, who greatly furpassed all his predecessors of this, and perhaps every other nation, in his genius for acting; in the sweetness and variety of his tones; the irrefiftible magic of his eye; the fire and vivacity of his action; the elegance of attitude; and the whole pathos of expression. Quin excelled in dignity and declamation; as well as in exhibiting some characters of humour, equally exquifite and peculiar. Cibber breathed the whole foul of female tenderness and passion; and Pritchard displayed all the dignity of diffress. That Great Great Britain was not barren of poets at this pe- An 1760. riod, appears from the detached performances of Johnson, Mason, Gray, the two Whiteheads, and the two Wartons, besides a great number of other bards who have sported in dyric poetry, and acquired the applause of their fellow-citizens. Candidates for literary fame appeared even in the higher sphere of life, embellished by the neryous stile, superior sense, and extensive erudition of a Corke; by the delicate tafte, the polifhed muse, and tender feelings of a Lyttleron. King shone unrivalled in Roman eloquence. Even the female fex diftinguished themselves by their taste and ingenuity. Miss Carter rivalled the celebrated Dacier in learning and critical knowledge; and Mrs. Lennox fignalized herfelf by many fuccessful efforts of genius, both in poetry and profe. The genius of Cervantes was transfused into the novels of Fielding, who painted the characters, and ridiculed the follies of life with equal ftrength, humour, and propriety. The field of history and biography was cultivated by many writers of ability, among whom we distinguish the copious Guthrie, the circumstantial Ralph, the laborious Carte, the learned and elegant Robertson, and above all the ingenious, penetrating, and comprehensive Hume, whom we rank among the first writers of the age, both as an historian and philosopher. Nor let us forget the merit conspicuous in the works of Campbell, remarkable for candour, intelligence, and precision. Johnson, inferior to none in philosophy, philology, poetry, and clasfical learning, stands foremost as an essayist, justly

An. 1760. admired for the dignity, strength, and variety of his stile, as well as for the agreeable manner in which he investigates the human heart, tracing every interesting emotion, and opening all the fources of morality. The laudable aim of inlifting the passions on the side of virtue, was successfully purfued by Richardson, in his Pamela, Clariffa, and Grandison; a species of writing equally new and extraordinary, where, mingled with much superfluity and impertinence, we find a sublime fystem of ethics, an amazing knowledge, and command of human nature. Many of the Greek and Roman classics made their appearance in English translations, which were favourably received as works of merit; among these we place, after Pope's Homer, Virgil by Pitt and Warton, Horace by Francis, Polybius by Hampton, and Sophocles by Francklyn. The war introduced a variety of military treatifes, chiefly translated from the French language; and a free country, like Great Britain, will always abound with political tracts and lucubrations. Every literary production of merit, calculated for amulement or instruction, that appeared in any country or language of Christendom, was immediately imported, and naturalized among the English people. Never was the pursuit after knowledge fo universal, or literary merit more regarded, than at this juncture by the body of the British nation; but it was honoured by no attention from the throne, and little indulgence did it reap from the liberality of particular patrons. The reign of queen Anne was propitious to the fortunes of Swife 0.90

Swift and Pope, who lived in all the happy pride of An. 1760. independence. Young, sequestered from courts and preferment, possesses a moderate benefice in the country, employing his time in a confcientious discharge of his ecclesiastical functions. Thomfon, with the most benevolent heart that ever warmed the human breaft, maintained a perpetual war with the difficulties of a narrow fortune. He enjoyed a place in Chancery by the bounty of lord Talbot, of which he was divefted by the fucceed? ing chancellor. He afterwards enjoyed a fmall pension from Frederick, prince of Wales, which was withdrawn in the fequel. About two years before his death he obtained, by the interest of his friend lord L-n, a comfortable place; but he did not live to tafte the bleffing of easy circumstances, and died in debt *.

None of the rest, whom we have named, enjoyed any share of the royal bounty, except W. Whitehead, who succeeded to the place of laureat at the death of Cibber; and some of them, ly contributed. The remaining furplus will be distributed among his poor relations; and it must be owned, for the honour of the booksellers, that Mr. Millar has facrificed his interest, by giving up the advantages of his copy, for the advancement of such a generous defign.

Cumberland; Anne the prin

^{*} However he was neglected when living, his memory has been honoured with peculiar marks of public regard, in an ample subscription for a new edition of his works, the profits to be employed in erecting a monument to his fame in Westminster-abbey; a subscription to which his present majesty king George III. has liberal-

An. 1760. whose merit was the most universally acknowledged, remained exposed to all the storms of indigence, and all the flings of mortification

> While the queen lived, fome countenance was given to learning. She converied with Newton, and corresponded with Leibnitz. She took pains to acquire popularity: the royal family, on certain days, dined in public for the fatisfaction of the people: the court was animated with a freedom of spirit and vivacity, which rendered it at once brilliant and agreeable. At her death that spirit began to languish; and a total stagnation of gaiety and good humour enfued. It was succeeded by a fullen calm, an ungracious reserve, and a still rotation of infipid forms * a con a broi bosis

Mulic,

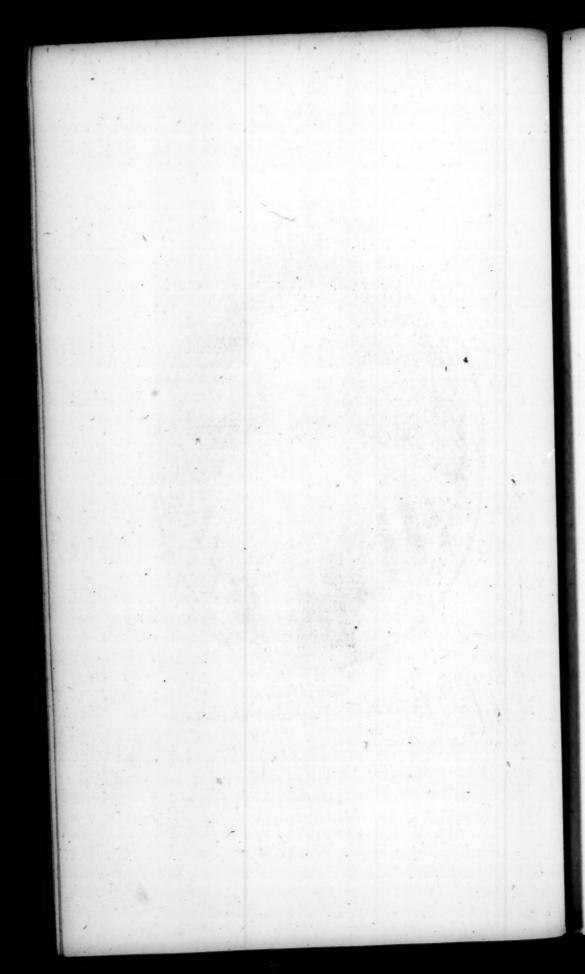

England was not defective in other arts that embellish and amuse. Musick became a fashionable study, and its professors generally caressed by the public. An Italian opera was maintained at a great expence, and well supplied with foreign performers. Private concerts were inftituted in every corner of the metropolis. compositions of Handel were universally admired, and he himself lived in affluence. It must be owned at the fame time, that Geminiani was

[·] George II. by his queen Carolina, had two fons and five daughters, who attained the age of maturity; Frederick prince of Wales, father to his present majesty George III. William duke of Cumberland; Anne the princess royal, married to the the late prince of Orange, and mother to the prefent ftadtholder; Mary landgraviate of Helle-Caffel; Louisa late queen of Denmark; Amelia and Carolina, who. were never married.

QUEEN CAROLINA.

neglected, though his genius commanded esteem and veneration. Among the few natives of England who distinguished themselves by their talents in this art, Green, Howard, Arne, and Boyce, were the most remarkable.

The British soil, which had hitherto been bar- painting, ren in the article of painting, now produced fome artists of extraordinary merit. Hogarth excelled all the world in exhibiting the scenes of ordinary life; in humorous historical designs. Hudson, Reynolds, and Ramsay, distinguished themselves by their superior merit in portraits; a branch that was fuccessfully cultivated by many other English painters. Wooton was famous for representing live animals in general; Seymour for race horses; Lambert, and the Smiths, for landschape; and Scot for sea pieces. Several spirited attempts were made on historical subjects; but little progress was made on the sublime parts of painting. Effays of this kind were discouraged by a false taste, founded upon a reprobation of British genius. The art of engraving was brought to perfection by Strange, and laudably practifed by feveral other masters; and great improvements were made in mezzotinto, miniature, and enamel. Many fair monuments of sculpture or statuary were raised by sculpture. Rysbach, Roubilliac, and Wilton. Architecture, which had been cherished by the elegant taste of a Burlington, foon became a favourite study; and many magnificent edifi es were reared in different parts of the kingdom. Ornaments were carved in wood, and moulded in stucco,

An. 1760.

An. 1760. with all the delicacy of execution; but a paffion for novelty had introduced into gardening, building, and furniture, an abfurd taste, equally void of beauty and convenience. Improvements in the liberal and useful arts, will doubtless be the consequence of that encouragement given to merit by the society instituted for these purposes, which we have described on another occasion. As for the Royal Society, it seems to have degenerated in its researches, and to have had very little share for half a century at least, in extending the instuence of true philosophy.

We shall conclude this reign with a detail of the forces and sleets of Great Britain, from whence the reader will conceive a just idea of her opulence and power.

Disposition of his Majesty's Forces, about the Middle of the Year 1760.

In Great Britain.

Commander in Chief, Field Marshal Ld. Visc. Ligonier.

Horse Guards. 2 Troops.

- I Id Delawar
- 2 Ld Cadogan

Hörse Grenadier Guards.
Troops.

1 Late Onflow's

Culstur

2 Earl of Harrington

Dragoons. 5 Regiments.

- 1 Lieut. Gen. Conway
- 3 Earl of Albemarle
- 4 Sir Robert Rich

16 Lieut. Col. Burgoyne

17 Lieut. Col. Hale

Foot Guards.

Three Regiments. 7 Battal.

- 1 Ld Visc. Ligonier. 3 Batt.
- 2 Ld Tyrawley. 2 Battal.
- 3 Earl of Rothes. 2 Battal. Foot Regiments 23.
- 3 Major Gen. Howard
- 9 Major Gen. Whitmore
- 14 Major Gen. Jeffreys
- 19 Ld George Beauclerk
 21 Earl of Panmure *
 - in of ranmure

GLOI	COL II.	133
30 Earl of Loudon	Foot. 17 Regiments.	An. 1760.
31 Lt. Gen. Holmes	1 Royal Scotch. 1st Battal.	*
32 Lt. Gen. Leighton	2 Major Gen. Fitzwilliam
34 Earl of Effingham	10 Lieut. Gen. Pole
36 Ld Robert Manners	THE RESERVE OF THE PROPERTY OF
41 Col. Parsons [Invalids]	16 Lieut. Gen. Handafyd
6 Ld Charles Manners	18 Lieut. Gen. Folliot
61 Col. Gray ned weeking!	26 Lieut. Gen. Anstruther
64 Col. Cary	29 Major Gen. Boscawen
66 Col. Lafaufille [5 Comp.]	39 Major Gen. Adlercron
67 Ld Fred. Cavendish	52 Col. Sandford
68 Col. Lambton I .loo as	59 Major Gen. Montagu
69 Col. Colville and J.1 76	62 Major Gen. Strode 11 0
70 Col. Parflow [5 Comp.]	73 Col. Brown nd lie
71 Col. Petitot Havost sa	76 Ld Forbes's rft Battalion
72 Duke of Richmond	83 Col. Sebright to helf 11
85 Col. Crawford [Royal Vo-	89 Col. Baghaw 100 M 21
d funteers] and the 24	90 Sir Ralph Gore
86 Earl of Sutherland *	91 Lieut. Col. Blaney 01
Highlanders.	c Major Gen, Hodgion
	notguirala Jersey. ojiM 8	1
88 Lt. Col. Vaughan	75 Col. Bofcawen . mail 11	*
* Royal Welsh Volunteers.	12 Lieut Gen. Napier
93 Major Gen. Campbell *		00 -19
* Fensible Men.	20 Licett Licett Licett Con 1
Col Montgomery, Hich-	Governor, Lieut. Gen. Earl
. bad Un Ireland I loo 8-	of Home.
So Rive Come	Foot 6 Patients 42
Commander in Chief, Lieut.	Foot. 6 Regiments.
Gen. Earl of Rothes.	6 Lieut. Gen. Guise M. E.
Horfe. 2 Regiments.	7 Lord Robert Bertie
1 Lieut. Gen. Brown	13 Lieut. Gen, Pulteney
	53 Col. Tovey O rojeM 17
2 Vacant	54 Late Grey obnil half 18
Dragoons. 8 Regiments.	57 Sir David Cunningham 8
5 Lient. Gen. Mostyn	The state of the s
8 Major Gen. Yorke	In Germany.
9 Col. Whitley and will he	Commenter thick solutions
12 Sir John Whiteford	Commander in Chief, Lieut.
13 Major Gen. Douglas	Gen. Marquis of Granby.
14 Major Gen. Campbell	Horse Guards. 1 Regiment.	100
17 Sir James Caldwell
18 Earl of Drogheda	Marquis of Granby to Dail of Diognetia	Work.	and the

HISTORY OF ENGLAND.

0.30	ъ,
A			ш	6-
ΛĐ	٠	1	7	60.
00	-	œ.		es A

H H O	TI D
Horse. 2 Regiments,	In North America.
3 Lieut. Gen. Dejean	Commander in Chief, Major
Major Gen. Honywood	Gen. Amhern.
4 Major Gen. Honywood	Nashi Muller 18. 3.1 %
Dragoon Gnards, 3 Regim.	Foot. 21 Regiments, or 25
of Light Gen. Handalyd	Battalions.
1 Lieut. Gen. Bland
2: Lient. Gen. Waldegrave	i Royal Scotch (ad Bat.)
3 Sir Charles Howard 4	15 Major Gen. Amherst 1Q
	17 Brig. Monckton 100 10
Dragoons. 6 Regiments.	22 Brig. Whitmore . 60 L
2 Lieut. Gen. Campbell	27 Lord Blakeney 77 b.1
6 Lt. Gene Cholmondeley	28 Col. Townshend Q
7 Sir John Cope 8 100	35 Lt. Gen. Otway 100 Q
to Sin John Mordaunt 1	40 Late Barrington L
11 Earl of Ancrame .100 ; 8	42 Royal Highlanders, 2 Bat.
	43 Lt. Gen. Kennedy Q
15 Major Gen Elliot 100 03	44 Lt. Gen. Abercromby
co Sir Ralph Core	45 Lt. Gen. Warburton L
Footon 16 Regiments.	46 Lt. Gen. Murray
5 Major Gen. Hodgson	47 Lt. Gen. Lascelles Q
8 Major Gen. Barrington	48 Major Gen. Webb Q
11 Lieut. Gen Bockland -
12 Lieut. Gen. Napier	55 Col. Oughton 58 Major Gen. Anstruther Q
20 Major Gen. Kingsley	60 Royal Americans. 4 Bat-
23 Lieut. Gen. Huske *	talions, 2 at Q had no welf Fufthers.	77 Col. Montgomery \ High-
0100000	78 Col Frager D Lands
24 Major Gen. Cornwallis	So Brig. Gage
25 Barl of Home	So Brig Gage
33 Major Gen. Griffin	* Those marked with L are,
37 Lieut. Gen. Stuart	or average at Louisbourg ; and
50 Major Gen. Carr 19 1	these with Q at Quebecons
51 Major Gen. Brudenell
81 [Ld Lindores [Invalids]	In the West Indies.
82 Col. Parkery ditto.	Diagoons, & regiments.
Foliate Captain Total	Foot. 5 2 Regiments.
In garrison at Embden.	A ST. THE WAY CONTINUES IN THE ST.
	4 Major Gen. Daroure G
87 Major Keith 7 High-	38 Sir James Rofs A
92 Major Camp 7 landers.	49 Major Gen. Walth J
	63 Major Gen! Watton G
riorfe Guarde, 191928 ment	14 Major Can Campbell
Marquis of Granby	17 Sie James Caldwell

65 Major Gen. Armiger G	70 * Col. Parflow (5, Comp.
* A Rands for Antigua, G	1 84 Lieut. Col. Coote
	94 Lt. Col. Morris's High
Guadaloupe, and J Jamaica 110	landers il provodire M oo
Land Sin Africa wall 40	Those marked are now on
At Senegal and Goree, [Go-	their passage thither. mildud
vernors, Col. Worge, and	Total. Horse and Dra-Lieut. Col. Newton.
So Hampfinged	goons 31 Regiments, or 64
74 Col. Talbot (4 Comp.)	fquadrons. Foot 97 Regi-
76 Lord Forbes's 2d Batt.	ments, or 105 Battalions.
Those marked I are at Ja-	64 Belliquenx
In Affa, (or Baft Indies)	Besides these, Great Bri-
At Madrafs, &c.	Hessian, and other German os sandwich	auxiliaries, to the amount of
Foot. 4 Battalions stricti	fixty thousand.
66 * Col. Lafausille (5 Comp.)	Commilider in Chief
Carne College State State State State	Co Agguilla anni
Disposition of his	Majefty's Fleet. enuturel co
rnadlAntheBa	go Prince Arianus og
50 Guernsey Stawart es	56 St. Florentinerabnud 1 47
Commander in CHR.	Vice-Admiral Pocock.
so Preflon	90 Dunkirking of op
Guns	Guns Mary
74 Lenox .soinemA.	66 Sunderland .
5. 1 Norfalk	Comman koirement 160
68 Grafton	60 4 Modman
66 Yarmouth	e8 Cumberland
64 Elizabeth nofignial 1 00	AT DOOR SHEET T
64 Duke d'Aquitain	Co sylinderianderian of
60 Weymouth fladoon 1 02	en Falmouth
60 Typerial bakram slod P.	to hammard pragme a " o!
60 + Pantherdian .82 drald	Those marked thus f are on Le to blow up the fordro's	their passage thither. shill a of Lewisbearg; and those marked thus to failed wind Copie S dan-	60 + Achilles Corress of
I'm	of Pembroke variation 4
O A FEBRUARIE	CO WEID STORY

HISTORY OF ENGLAND.

An. 1760.

In the West Indies, Commander in Chief, Rear-Admiral

	EN TOUR AND TOUR OF THE PARTY OF THE Guns a simola .100 11 12	Guns and Lines of what D.
go Marlborough	64 Naffau
80 Foudroyant	64 Berwickint al
80 Cambridge	60 Dreadnought
74 Dublin	J vernors, Col. especially
70 Dorfetshire	Lieut. Col. New Slag 300
76 Temple Train .lasoT	60 Lion
68 Buckingham	50 Hampfhire 1
66 Lancaster	74 Col. Talbor daiwall 02
64 Raifonable 201 10 20119th	76 Lord Forbes's 2d Batt.
64 Belliqueux	Those marked I are at Ja-
64 Bienfatint ent estile	majeas the festiat the Deenvard
64 Edinburgh	Mands
rieman, and other German	At Madrals, &c.

Foot. 4 Dattalnesnarrasiball off no the amount of Commander in Chief, Vice-Admiral Saunders.

Guns Lines	Guns
90 Neptune	00 Firm
go Prince and Aller Sping	fin 60 St Albans
74 Thunderer	50 Guernley
64 Somerfet of LambA. soi	V 35P Thetis buemmo
60 Dunkirk	50 Preston

basis In North America.

Commander in Chief, Commodore Lord Colville.

Guns 74 † Fame 70 Northumberland 70 Prince of Orange 70 † Vanguard 66 Devonthire 64 Trident 64 Alcide	Guns 60 † Kingston 50 † Norwich 50 † Rochester word Those marked thus † faited March 28, with the engineers, Sc. to blow up the fordifications
04 Aicide	of Louisbourg; and those marked
60 + Achilles	thus t, failed with Capt. Swan-
60 Pembroke	You.

In the East Indies	17 thips. An 1760
ben sound well indies	Compete and authoritie Lifts of the Mediterranean	Losend, raken, frank, er can
	" us the profess Heftilities.
	cruifers and convoys 61
Total. Ships of the Line	The state of the s
Gums of the Line	3010
	De Darkantskille The Chart
A List of the Smps of the Line,	that are at or near Home. Under the Command of Sir Edward H	lawke, Admiral Bojcawen, Gc.
Le Formidable seug	L'Arc-en Ciel brohnO 66
100 Royal George Small 61,	Le Chariot Royal brofbed 46
100 Royal Sovereign 1190 Al	64 Edgar .7371
100 Royal Anne habeM al	64 Prince Frederick A'h aud
LeComptedest MaumiN op	64 Hampton-court no d od
go Union (5) 51	64 Modest mointell'A
Le Danae daiwhna 200	64 Monmouth Sugarand 4
go St. George anollas all	64 Revenge (d) racad ad
90 Barfleur AudimAt	64 Sterling-caffeouodreald L
PArethule 90 Barfleur 90 Duke 90 Duke 90 Duke	60 Anfor of perced fornomia
84 Royal William ongil at	60 Augusta 871
80 Princess Royal sibus El I	60 Defiance dudroyant sol
Se Princel's Ameliavailand of	60 Dunkirk krijqueux Arikand 60
Le Mercure	60 St. Florentine songro'd
74 Centaur.odet	60 Jerfey sidenolis A s.I
Le Marthal Bellensbollu 47	60 Princes Louisalia line de al
Le Blonde 1 alonde 1	60 Princels Mary stick 9.1
74 Hercules erodonger ed	Le Diane biquand
74 Hero (\) Tollocellor (\)	60 Nottingham
24 Magnanime (s) —— ol	60 Rippon Sindo A T
74 Mars d to have been fue	Le Calathea and rolloni Wood
74 Shrewsbury 74 Temeraire	50 Antelope obnishi od
74 Temeraire
74 Terrible	50 Deptford 50 Falklandii dguodT (a)
74 Torbay	50 Falklandi bghoni (a)
74 Warfpite's nintres very ton	for Jack in Light all of
70 Burford	50 Portland stoods socitom
	50 Prefton ad or his (a)
70 Conqueror	50 Rochefter updo sew farig
70 Princessa abai Novi adi; ni	150 Windshord code T
70 Swiftsure vehrol le	H(s) By the Huske pristers
FRENCH	Com-

HISTORY OF ENGLAND.

• •	1-11-7 A-17 - Ja - 7
egid) 👣	In the Eaft Indies
Compage and authentic Lift of N	len of War, both of France and England, taken, funk, or ca	Jually left fince the Commencement North America of the present Hostilities.	North America
ruifers and convoys 61	At or near home, c
FRENCH	SHIPS taken.
021	l'otal. Ships of he Line
1755. Guns.	Guns.
L'Alcide WH There to to an 64:	Le Duc d'Hanovre
Le Lus Admiral Boscaruen, 26.4.	Total. Ships of he Line sand of Lift of the Line of the Command of Str Laward Ha
L'Arc-en Ciel broho 50	Le Formidable 27184
Le Chariot Royal brotho 9 36	Le Temerage Geografia
1707	4ço Royal Savereiustne al
Duc d'Aquitaine fadant 6a	Le Modesteenna layon 064
Le Bien Acquis notque 11 38	LeCompte deSt. Florentine 66
L'Hermione flaboM 28	Le — (c) going an
L'Emeraude fitnomnoM 28	op Union (a) — al op Sandwich and Le Danae do St. George enolled al
Le Bezoar (b) sgristo 1 24	Le Rellone angood 12 a6
L'Escarbouclenan-anilrais 16	L'Arethufe aughten 46
New one pierced for 16	L'Arethuse ruellrag 36 L'Hermione 26
1758 Daniel 10	Literinone Sand 20
Le Roudrovant	Le Mignonne IIIW layof 22
Le Foudroyant soneils (1 84	L'Hardie Royal sibreH'L
Le Belliqueux Anidaud 66	Le Berolayailama aboning 20
L'Orphee entine 264	Le Mercure . Atawall 16
Le Raisonable verre 64	74 Centaur. 0671
Le Bienfaisantuo. I elemin 64	Le Marshal Belleisteoilu 44
Le Loire Mary 36 Le Diane bigarn 36 Le Diane bigarn 36 Le Robuste madain 32 Le Galathea colored 22 Le Gairlande colored 23 Le Gairlande colored 23 Le Gairlande colored 32 Le Gairlande 32 Le Gairlande colored 32 Le Gairlande 32 Le Gairlande colored 32 Le Gairlande 32 Le	Le Blonde sogsad 32
Le Diane bigorinl 36	Le Terpfichore aslusasH 26
L'Echo madanitto 1 32	Le Glocetter (d) ordin 12
Le Robuste noodi 9 24	Le (e) ominangal 12
Le Galathea 2015niV/ 22	Caused and a stable of
La Caislanda	30 Shrewfbury and and a con
re Gamande, adolatus 23	74 Temeraire de soult on

FRENCH SHIPS defireyed.

	ıns.	Guns.
1755.		1759.
L'Esperance (f)	74	L'Ocean 84
1756.	13	Le Soleil Royal
Le Fidelle (g).	36	L'Heros 74
1757:	CM	Le Redoubtable
L'Acquillon Brank	56	Le Thesee
Le Brun	36	Le Superbe 74
Le Nymphe is 70% liplo	32	Le Glorieux 74
New one pierced for	20	L'Inflexible (i)
1758.		Le Salames 8
Le Bien Aime (b)	74	Le saitali sa
L'Entreprennant	74	Le
Le Prudente	74	Te ansing
Le Capricieux	64	Le elliquit
Le Celebre	64	Le (A) - 98 A
Lanched, pierced for	50	1760.
L'Apollon Lio I	50	Le Pomone
New one pierced for	36	L'Atalante (1) 36
Le Fidelle 291	136	L'Hinondelle 32
Le Rofe	36	Le Machault 32
Le Phinoceros TI	36	Le Bienfaisant 22
Le Calipso	24	Le Marquis Marloye 18
Le Chevre 10751	16	- Viole
	16	1730
1-60-1	200	Warwick 60

(f) This ship after being taken, was obliged to be funk.

(g) Said to have been funk in the Colchester, &c's engagement.

(b) As she carried a broad pennant, she was more than probable a royal-ship.

(i) The ships in the Vilaine are ruined, we suppose.

(k) These are the fix fireships burnt at the fiege of

(1) We have not added the armed thips destroyed along with these two frigates, nor the ship remaining in Gaspee-bay, a few months ago.

FRENCH

D M G.

An. 1760.

FRENCH SHIPS cafually loft.

Guns	Guns	Gime.	Guns
1755.	2	Le Licorne	32
None	DESCRIPTION OF THE PERSON OF T	1759.	The same
1756.	Lebelei	Le Jufte	74
Le Leopard	64	Northumberland	74
Le Junon	Lie Redo	To Courses	70
Le Concorde	28	Le Senecterre	A CONTRACTOR
201	Le Supe	Le Soleil Royal	24
1757	La Glar		24
Le Lutine	x=11.136	Duc de Fronsac (m)	20
L'Amitie	28	1760.
Le Mutine	24	None (b) emiA n	Lie Bie
1758.	e.I	Ansenga Ansenga	Maria
L'Opiniatre	64	sdente	7.86
L'Eveille	64	Destroyed	1730
L'Aigle	56	Taken	1706
L'Alcion	50	and hanning ha	dage I
Le Greenwich	92 Pom	Total (n)	4222
de (A) ato	L'Atala	one pierced for	New .
ENG.	LISH	SHIPS taken: 516	Lebid
nault vestilles	Le Mac	35	Le Ro
	Guns	1758essoni	Guns
81 evol 255 - 101		Stork	or Cal
None		THE RESERVE OF THE PARTY OF THE	Le Ch
0871 1756.		The state of the s	11 12
Warwick	60	1760.	1
1757.		Virgin	12
Greenwich ildo 25W	orken,	This thip after being	(3)
Oicenwich	200	The product (B) The second of the second	fouk.
The Bar Sant	k'in the	Said to have been fun	144

(m) The three last ships were lost coming down the river St. Laurence, with the Machault, after Quebec was taken; whether king's frigates, armed ships, or store ships, we won't determine.

(a) It is unnecessary to add by what particular gentlemen so many ships were taken, sunk, or otherwise destroyed, former lists and recent instances will very well excuse that trouble.

ENGLISH SHIPS deftroyed.

None 1755.	Guns	Triton	Guns 20
Proserpine fireship	8	None	1759 Englimeet
None 1757.	eg Kestly	Penguin	1760.]
1758. Bridgewater	24	rather than	French gunst

ENGLISH SHIPS cafually loft.

da, Rol o	Guns	n 1706 Dest	reach take	Gune
1755.		Mermaid	11 110 10	20
Mars	64	Falcon	1	8
Bonetta	8	San San San	760.	24-15-6
.1756.		Ramillies		90
None		Tartar's Priz	e	28
1757.		Loweftoffe		24
Tilbury	60:	neinvelo	add ma	-
1758,		3	Data Hill	644
Prince George	80	gars, that c	annly app	iq a
Invincible	74	Deftroy	ent, is be	72
Litchfield de de	50	Taken	7 10 279	144
1759.	an off him d		The state of the
Refolution	74	Total	.53IDE	860
Effex	64	he conduct	ni onilo	igmi.
m doll sylevni	e, than to	d commerce	s of navi	upit t

the advantages of neutrality, and, in all human dense believ, the its infant navigation immediately

Spain, floudd the precipitately espoule the cases of the other branch of the house of Bourbons for, granting it was in her power to reinforce for French nave with thirty fall of the ime, the cam-to state and state of the state of the fate of a war, as the affociate or auxiliary to the enemits of England; because it would necessarily soffelt

HISTORY OF ENGLAND.

An. 1760.

French veffels English ditto	GTT2H SHIE	101
English 5	Deftroyed 40 anovi 8 4 anovi 8 4 anovi 8 36	79 as follows, Loft 18
French guns English ditto	4222 860	Total 79
Ballance against France French taken 1706 English	Deftroyed 1730	Loft 786
.odgr 1562	8701 . 64 Falco	Monetta .
ar's Prize	In T	Total 3362

From the foregoing lift of sea and land forces it plainly appears, that Great Britain, on her own element, is more than a match for all the maritime powers of Europe, should they combine to her prejudice. Nothing, therefore, could be more impolitic in the conduct of any neutral state, ambitious of naval commerce, than to involve itself in a war, as the affociate or auxiliary to the enemies of England; because it would necessarily forfeit the advantages of neutrality, and, in all human probability, fee its infant navigation immediately destroyed. This would certainly be the fate of Spain, should she precipitately espouse the cause of the other branch of the house of Bourbon; for, granting it was in her power to reinforce the French navy with thirty fail of the line, the combined bined fleets would still be unable to dispute the An. 1760. empire of the sea, against such a superiority of number as the English could produce; and in the mean time her most important settlements in the West Indies, the source of all her wealth, would be exposed to the efforts of an enterprising foe, accustomed to conquest; while her merchant-ships, that cover the ocean, would fall an easy prey to the cruisers of Great Britain.

GEORGE

GEORGE III.
King of Great Britain &c.&c.

GEORGE III.

THE demise of the crown was no sooner sig- An. 1760. nified to the secretaries of state, than Mr. Pitt repaired to Kew, and communicated these Proclatidings to his new fovereign, George III. who mation thus ascended the throne in the twenty-third year George of his age. The lords of the privy council were III. immediately affembled; and next day his majesty was proclaimed before Saville house in Leicesterfields, in presence of the great officers of state, the nobility, the lord mayor and aldermen of the city of London, and a great number of persons of the first distinction. The same proclamation was repeated with the usual solemnities in different parts of the metropolis, which resounded with joy and acclamations. To the council, affembled at Carleton-house, the king addressed himself in these words: " The loss that I and the nation have " fustained by the death of the king my grand-" father, would have been severely felt at any " time; but coming at fo critical a juncture, and " so unexpected, it is by many circumstances aug-" mented; and the weight now falling upon me, " much increased, I feel my own infusficiency to " fupport it as I wish: but, animated by the ten-" derest affection for this my native country, and " depending on the advice, experience, and abi-NUMB. XXXIV.

HISTORY OF ENGLAND:

An. 1760.

" lities of your lordships, the support and affift-" ance of every honest man, I enter with chear-" fulness into this arduous situation; and shall " make it the business of my life to promote, in " every thing, the glory and happiness of these " kingdoms; to preserve and strengthen the con-" flitution, both in church and state; and as I " mount the throne in the midst of an expensive " but just and necessary war, I shall endeavour to " profecute it in the manner the most likely to " bring about an honourable and lafting peace, " in concert with my allies." This declaration. implying a refolution to profecute the fame meafures which had been planned under the late king, was published at the request of the lords affembled in council, and effectually quieted the apprehensions of all those who dreaded an alteration.

Steps taken by the new monarch. His majesty now took and signed the oath relating to the security of the church of Scotland, and subscribed two instruments thereof, in presence of the lords of the council, by whom they were witnessed. One of these was transmitted to the court of session, to be recorded in the books of Sederunt, and afterwards lodged in the public register of Scotland; the other remained among the records of the council. The two houses of parliament being assembled, the members were sworn in; the peers by the lord keeper; the commons before the duke of Rutland, lord steward: then both houses were adjourned. The lord mayor and aldermen of London attended the king with compliments of condolance and congratula-tion;

of a soft e a soft e

D' THOMAS SHERLOCK late Lord Bishop of London.

tion; and directions were given for the funeral of An.1760. the late king.

His royal highness Edward duke of York, the king's brother, being enrolled a member of the privy council, and John earl of Bute admitted to the fame honour, his majefty, by proclamation. required all perfons, who were in office of authority or government at the decease of the late king. to proceed in the execution of their respective Another proclamation was iffued for the encouragement of piety and virtue, and for preventing and punishing vice, prophaneness, and immorality. The tide of affection towards the young monarch began to run fo high, that addresses, couched in the warmest professions of love and attachment, flowed in from every part of the kingdom. The magistrates of London led the way; and their example was followed by the merchants and traders of that city, amounting to fuch a number as had never before appeared on the like occasion *. The clergy of London and Westmin-

* Though it would be superfluous to insert those addresses, which contain nothing very remarkable, the reader will not be disgusted to see the following letter, written to the king by the bishop of London; a letter fraught with good sense, piety, and affection, in all respects worthy of the character of that aged and venerable prelate.

Nov. 1, 1760.

When

"SIRE,

K 2

"Amidst the congratulations that surround the throne, permit me to lay before your majesty a heart, which, though oppressed with age and instrmity, is no stranger to the joys of my country.

An 1760: ster, headed by the archbishop of Canterbury, payed their compliments to his majesty on his accession to the throne; and the two universities were not flow in prefenting their addresses of congratulation. In a word, all the bodies politic and corporate, in all the cities and counties of the three kingdoms, feemed to vie with each other in expressions of loyalty and affection to their new sovereign, who received them with fuch affability and marks of regard as could not but be extremely pleasing to a people remarkable for sensibility and fentiment.

If

When the melancholy news of the late king's demise reached us, it naturally led us to confider the loss we had fustained, and upon what our hopes of futurity depended. The first part excited grief, and put all the tender paffions into motion; but the fecond brought life and spirit with it, and wiped away the tears from every face.

Oh! how graciously did the providence of God provide a fucceffor, able to bear the weight of government in that unexpected event.

You, Sir, are the persons whom the people ardently desire; which affection of theirs is happily returned, by your majesty's declared concern for their prosperity, and let nothing disturb this mutual confent. Let there be but one contest between them. whether the king loves the people beft, or the people him: and may it be a long, a very long contest; may it never be decided, but let it remain doubtful; and may The paternal affection on the one fide, and the filial obedience on the other, be had in perpetual remembrance.

This will probably be the last time I shall ever trouble your majesty. I beg leave to express my warmest wishes and prayers on your behalf. May the God of heaven and earth have you always under his protection, and direct you to feek his honour and glory in all you do; and may you reap the benefit of it, by an increase of happiness in this world, and in the next."

Geor

If the expressions of their joy were so tumultuous before they could possibly be acquainted with the excels An. 1760.

We shall also indulge the public with the address of the Quakers, who, in manners, diction, and turn of thinking, feem to be a species dilling from the ordinary race of men.

To GEORGE the Third, King of Great Britain, and the dominions thereunto belonging.

The humble address of his protestant subjects, the people called Quakers.

"May it please the king,
"Deeply afflicted with the sudden and sorrowful event, that leads our fellow subjects with condolance to the throne, we beg leave to express the sympathy we feel on this afflicting occasion.

Justly sensible of the favour and protection we have enjoyed during the late mild and happy reign, and impressed with the warmest sentiments of duty and gratitude to our deceased sovereign, we pay this tribute of unaffected grief to the memory of the father and the friend of his people.

We have abundant reason to acknowledge the goodness of Almighty God, for continuing to this period a life of such importance to the welfare of these kingdoms; a period, when we behold a prince, endowed with qualities that add lustre to a crown, formed by tuition and example to protect the liberties of his people, ascending the British throne, and, in the earliest acts of power, giving the most ample demonstrations of his royal regard for piety and virtue.

Ever faithful and zealoufly affected to thy illustrious house, though differing in sentiments and conduct from others of our fellow subjects, we embrace this opportunity to crave thy indulgence and protection: and beg leave to affure the king, that our differt proceeds not from a contumacious difregard to the laws, to custom, or authority, but from motives to us purely conscientious.

The same religious principle that produces this disfent, we trust, through divine affistance, will continue to engage us, as it always hath done since we were a people, to exert whatever influence we may be possessed of, in promoting the fear of God, the honour of the king, and the prosperity of his subjects.

K 3

An, 1760. Encomium on George III.

excellencies of the object which engaged their affection, what transports must they have felt when they found all their wishes even more than realized? No prince had ever ascended the throne of Great Britain under happier auspices, from the universal consent and approbation of the people. than those which attended the elevation of his present majesty; yet no English prince was ever less known to the subjects whom Providence had decreed he should one day govern. Instead of making himself familiar to the eyes of the public. mingling with fociety, giving way to the ebullitions of youth, and sometimes countenancing the gaver follies of the age, in imitation of former princes destined to sway the sceptre of England, who thus at once indulged their own paffions and acquired popularity; he preserved the laws of temperance and decorum inviolate: he restrained all the inordinate fallies of youth: fequestered from all participation in the measures of government, he lived within the bosom of retirement, surrounded by a few friends and dependants, to whom the virtues of his disposition were known. The thinking part of the nation, precluded from this opportunity of contemplating the true character of rheir

May the Almighty bless thy endeavours to put a stop to the essuance of blood, and render thee the happy instrument of restoring peace and tranquillity. May facred and unerring wisdom ever be thy guide, adorn thee with every virtue, and crown thee with every bleffing, that future ages may commemorate the happiness of thy reign with grateful admiration.

.. ettordu en

Signed in London, the first day of the twelfth month, 1760."

future fovereign, conceived no fublime idea of ta- Ar. 1760. lents which had not yet shone distinguished to the eves of the public; and confoled themselves with fuch comfortable prefages as they could derive from his good nature and benevolence, which were universally acknowledged. But when he emerged from that obscurity which had shrouded him from the knowledge of his future subjects, and assumed the reins of government he was born to manage. he seemed to have inherited, together with the crown, the talent of wearing it with dignity, and already appeared perfect in the art of reigning. All his deportment displayed the most graceful. ease; all his conduct spoke superior sense, serenity. and composure. When the people beheld their amiable fovereign; when they furveyed the elegance of his person, his manly and majestic mien. his open, elevated, and ingenuous countenance, glowing with complacency, fentiment, and humanity: they gazed with all the eagerness of the most loval affection. But their love was heightened to rapture and admiration, when the excellency of his character unfolded itself more distinctly to their view; when they were made acquainted with the transcendent virtues of his heart, and the uncommon extent of his understanding; when they knew he was mild, affable, focial, and fympathizing; fusceptible of all the emotions which private friendship inspires; kind and generous to his dependents, liberal to merit, with a hand ever open and extended to the children of diffres; when they knew his heart was intirely British, warmed with the most cordial love of his native country, and

K4

An. 1760. and animated with plans of the most genuine patriotism; when they learned that his mind had been carefully cultivated with science; that his tafte was polished, his knowledge enlarged; and that he possessed almost every accomplishment that art could communicate, or application acquire.

Thus affected, they could not withold their approbation from those who had contributed to render him so worthy of the throne which he now ascended. Their bleffings were liberally poured forth on that excellent princess, who watched over his infancy with all the tenderness of maternal zeal: whose precepts enlightened his morals; whose example confirmed his virtue. Their veneration was extended to all those who had so effectually laboured in his improvement; to the venerable prelate * who had superintended his education; to the noble + lord who had been appointed the governor of his youth. But their applause was in a special manner due to the ability, affiduity, and unremitted attention of John earl of Bute; a nobleman of, fuch probity as no temptation could warp; of fuch spirit as no adversity could humble; feverely just in all his transactions; learned, liberal, courteous, and candid; an enthusiast in patriotism. a noble example of public, an amiable pattern of domestic virtue. His inviolable attachment to his fovereign's father was founded on perfonal regard, fustained by his love of liberty and independence, which no confideration of interest

Character of John earl of Bute.

Dr. Thomas, now bishop of Winchester. † The earl of Harcourte avol la bloo from som could tronized.

Pameral

could ever induce him to forego. His affection An. 1760. for the father devolved upon the fon, whom he may be faid to have cultivated from his cradle. He concurred in forming his young mind to virtue; in storing it with ideas and sentiment suitable to his birth and expectation; in improving his tafte, and directing his pursuit of knowledge. He was the constant companion of his solitude, whom he honoured with his friendship; the bosom-counsellor, on whose judgment and fidelity he with the most perfect confidence reposed. These connections being confidered, the earl of Bute could not fail of being admitted to a share in the administration when his mafter ascended the throne; and this was a circumstance not at all disagreeable to the former minister, with whom he had lived on terms of friendly communication.

How much soever the king might have disapproved of those measures which had involved the nation in such an expensive war on the continent of Europe, affairs were fo fituated, that he could not abruptly renounce that fystem of politics, with any regard to the dignity of his crown, or to the honour of the public faith, which was in some measure engaged to support the German allies of Great Britain. With the crown he inherited a war. which he thought it his duty to profecute with vigour, until it could be terminated by a general peace, in which the honour and advantage of the nation might be equally confulted. It was therefore agreed, in an extraordinary council affembled on purpose, that the armament at Portsmouth should proceed on the expedition for which it was Merit patronized.

An. 1760 originally intended; but it was countermanded in the fequel. Mean while the king exhibited other agreeable specimens of his disposition, by doing justice to certain individuals who had fuffered in the former reign, for having acted according to the dictates of conscience and honour; by inviting to his councils the wife and virtuous of all denominations; by opening his royal arms to embrace all his people, without distinction of party: by favouring merit with his peculiar protection; by extending his notice and his royal bounty, unfolicited, even to genius fequestered in the shade of obfcurity, it ad, all said cor bearings priod to let

Funeral of the late king.

On the tenth day of November, in the evening, the body of the late king was removed from Kenfington to the apartment called the Prince's chamber, near the house of peers, where it lay in state until next night, when it was interred with great funeral pomp in the royal vault in the chapel of Henry VII. adjoining to Westminster-abbey, the duke of Cumberland appearing in the character of chief mourner. These last duties to the deceased monarch being pioufly discharged, the eyes of the nation were turned upon their youthful fovereign, and the majority feemed equally to wish and to hope that a new system of politics would be embraced. They could not reflect without regret, that notwithstanding the prodigious sum of eighteen millions sterling, granted in the last session of parliament for the profecution of the war, not one expedition was carried into act upon the British element for the annoyance of the enemy; for, as to the reduction of Canada, it was the necessary confe-

consequence of those conquests made, and those An. 1760. measures taken, in the course of the preceding year. They reflected that a great number of capital ships lay inactive in the different harbours of Great Britain, while the French privateers infulted the Channel, disturbing the commerce of England; and that an armament equipped at a monftrous expence, and feemingly fufficient to reduce all the remaining French fettlements in the West Indian islands, was detained in idle suspence at Spithead, until the feafon for action was intirely elapfed. They faw, with concern, that the eyes and efforts of the ad---n were more and more directed to the operations in Westphalia and Saxony; and, indeed, their perception, in this respect, was confiderably affifted by a performance published at this juncture, under the title of " Considerations on the present German War;" a performance fraught with fuch perspicuity, candour, and precision, as could not fail to operate very powerfully on the conviction of the public, which accordingly, thus aroufed, feemed to wake at once from an inconfistent dream of prejudice and infatuation.

As the fentiments of the author are exactly Reflecconformable to our own, and the subject of his tions inquiry extremely interesting to every honest Bri- upon to war in ton, we shall present the reader with a series of his Germachief arguments and politions, which will be found ny. little more than a recapitulation of the remarks and reflections differinated through the course of this history. He prefixes to his work, by way of advertisement, the rescript to a manifesto of the

upon the

Pruf-

An. 1760. Prussian monarch, delivered and printed by his minister at London during the late war, importing. That as no German prince has a right to meddle with the internal policy of Great Britain, nor with the constitution of its government, he had reason to hope the English nation would not meddle with the domestic affairs of the empire; more especially as England had no reason to interfere in this quarrel from any confideration of commerce, or other wife: and granting that England should be more favourably inclined towards one German court than to another, yet he thought it too unreasonable to pretend that fuch powerful and respectable princes, as those of the empire are, should be obliged to regulate their conduct according to the inclinations of those among the English, who strive to involve their countrymen in foreign quarrels, that are of no manner of concern to England. He begins with a comparative view of the strength of France and England; and undeniably proves, that France is by far the most powerful in the number of men. in the greatness of revenue, and the variety of refources: every measure, therefore, which has a tendency to unite the powers of Europe among themselves, and against France, must be for the general advantage of Europe, and the particular interest of Great Britain; and every measure tending to fet the states of Germany, Holland, and England, either at war with each other, or among themselves, must be calculated for the advantage of France, and the prejudice of the other European powers. Of consequence, whenever such wars shall break out between any two states of Europe, or any two princes of the empire, it will be An 1760. the policy of France to encourage and inflame the conquest, as it will be the interest of every other flate to compose these differences. He observes, that when France interferes in the quarrels of the empire, should England or Holland espouse the opposite cause, such an interposition could only ferve to extend and multiply the evil, and confequently to weaken the power of the empire: that nothing but a hearty union of the emperor and the feveral flates which compose the empire, acting under one head, can either weaken France, or ferve the general interest of Europe: that England, so long as it continues neuter in disputes between any two states of Germany, will always be courted by both parties, and generally be able to mediate a pacification; but this importance immediately vanishes, the moment she commences a party: that if the French will promote diffentions among the German princes, and these last become the dupes of fuch policy, Great Britain is furely not answerable for the consequences: that the powers of the empire, when united, are sufficient of themselves to repel every invasion: if, therefore, they have so little affection for their country as to call in foreign troops to oppress it, the English can never be bound by any obligation to rescue it from oppression; and nothing can be more abfurd than to suppose that Great Britain should conflitute itself the general knight-errant of Europe. exhaust itself, and neglect its own wars, in order to fave men, in spite of themselves, who will not take any step towards their own preservation. He 20103(6)

An. 1760.

then proceeds to demonstrate the folly of supposing the protestant interest is in danger: he reminds us. that in the last war the pretended champion of Protestantism was univerfally decried, by the subjects of this kingdom, as a man void of faith, religion, and every good principle; and that Great Britain was then strongly connected with the house of Austria, the head of the popish interest in Germany; yet the other religion was never supposed to be in the smallest jeopardy; that no popish power fince that period had attempted to infringe the religious liberties of any protestant state; nor had any innovation been made in the empire, to the prejudice of that perfuafion, except by the k--- of P---a himself, who had built a popish thurch in his capital, and caused the foundation to be laid in his own name; a favour towards the Catholics, for which the pope wrote him a letter of thanks and acknowledgment: that as many protestant states have declared against him as he can number among his allies; the Swedes and Saxons. the troops of Mecklembourg and Wirtemberg, the Palatines, Bohemians, and Hungarians, being actually at open variance with this protestant hero: while the Dutch and Danes keep aloof with fuch indifference, as plainly proves they do not apprehend their religion is at all endangered: that no protestant power in Europe will thank England for what she has done in the empire; nor will any German protestant state act in concert with her, except those only which she has bought, and taken into her pay: that this supposed protestant champion commenced his operations by invading and taking taking possession of the first protestant state of the An. 1760: empire; and that though the minister of England accompanied him in this expedition, the minister of Hanover disowned him at the diet of Ratisbon. and even declared his mafter's deteffation of fuch proceedings: that neither a Gregory nor a Ferdinand could have wished for any greater disafter to the protestants, than that Saxony, where the reformation began, should be ravaged with all the croelty of war, its country wasted, its cities ruined, their fuburbs burned, its princes and nobles driven into banishment, its merchants beggared; its peafants forced into arms, compelled to theath their fwords in the bowels of their countrymen, allies. neighbours, and fellow-protestants of Silesia, Hungary, and Bohemia; or obliged to take refuge in the service of France, to fight under popish banners against the protestants of Hanover and Great Britain. To those who plead the necessity of preventing France from making a conquest of Hanover, he replies, than an electorate of the empire cannot be annihilated but by the destruction of the whole Germanic constitution; and should a king of France seize Hanover, and eiect a whole family from its rights, every member of the empire, even Sweden and Denmark, would take the alarm, and rife up against such an act of violence : it were therefore to be wished, that France should attempt to hold fuch a precarious conquest, that all Germany might be united against her encroaching power. Besides, were it possible that the empire could tamely behold France in possession of a German electorate, it would hardly quit the cost of mainAn. 1760.

maintaining troops to defend it; or should the French, contrary to all their usual maxims of policy, oppress and pillage these conquered dominions, the English might have reason to sympathize with their fellow-subjects in distress; but furely they could have no reason to expend perhaps twelve millions of their own, in fruitless endeavours to fave the Hanoverians a twentieth part of that fum, which is more than they could poffibly lose, were the French in possession of their country: a truth ascertained by experiment, inasmuch as they actually were possessed of the whole electorate, and, exclusive of outrages committed by a rapacious general, whose conduct was condemned by his fovereign, they contented themfelves with the usual taxes and revenue; though this was no more than a temporary possession, at which the other states of the empire connived, because the Hanoverians had rendered themselves obnoxious to the rest of the Germans by their union with the k--- of P---a, who had twice fet all Germany in a flame, ravaged the richest parts of the empire, and facrificed his own subjects, as well as those of other states, by thousands to his ambition. He observed, that the landgraviate of Hesse, the finest country in the north of Germany, was every year occupied by French armies; and the landgrave thought himself fully compensated for the damage it might fustain from their invasion by an English subsidy of three hundred and forty thousand pounds, in consideration of which he permitted his troops to serve in the army of Great Britain: if this was not deemed a full compensation

tion, he might have enjoyed the benefit of a neu- An. 1766. trality. He affirmed, it was not with a view to oppress the Hanoverians that the French penetrated into Westphalia; but because they knew the English would meet them there, and fight them at fuch a disadvantage as might ballance all the fuccess of the British arms in every other part of the world. The French have no other country in which they can act against the power of England. They cannot invade Great Britain: if they could, not a regiment would be fent into Westphalia. They have neither transports to convey, nor a navy to protect their troops in the paffage to any part of America, Africa, or the East Indies: they must therefore either remain at home unemployed, or be fent into Germany; and furely while they are prevented from invading the British dominions, and all their islands in the West Indies lie exposed to the attempts of the English, they could not wish for a more effectual diversion than that of transferring the war into Germany, where the utmost endeavours of the British nation serve only to intail mifery on that electorate which it attempts to defend; and to exhaust those treasures. which, if applied to the purposes of a truly British war, would infallibly complete the conquest of every settlement possessed by France in America; consequently cut off that ambitious power from the chief fource of its wealth and commerce. He demonstrated, that the English, instead of protecting the Hanoverians, had reduced them to the brink of ruin, by making their country the feat of war; and that there would be no end to the mife-

Numb. 34.

ries

An. 1760.

ries of that unhappy people, if the English g----t, out of meer tenderness to their fellow-subjects. should thus bring their own enemies into the country of Hanover, and make the back of the - electorate rue the smart of every quarrel which may happen to arise between Britain and any other power on the continent of Europe. He then confiders the nature of the connexion fubfifting between England and the k --- of P ----; and does not scruple to affert the English are tributaries to that monarch. He fays a fubfidy is an honourable pension given by one state to another, in consideration of fervices done, or benefits to be received. What England had agreed to pay to Russia would have been a fubfidy, because, in consideration of a certain stipulated sum, the czarina obliged herself to furnish an army of fifty-five thousand men for the use of his Britannic majesty: the money payed to the landgrave of Hesse Cassel is a subsidy, because his country lies exposed as a frontier to Hanover, and his troops actually ferve in the army of Great Britain; but the k-of P-has done nothing for the immense sums received from England, except having invaded, feized, and oppreffed a protestant electorate; lighted up a civil war in Germany, which hath been fed with the lives of above one hundred thousand protestants; involved Great Britain in a quarrel with the head and diet of the empire; compelled the queen of Hungary to unite with France, and, by ceding Nieuport and Oftend to that rapacious power, give up in a great measure the advantages of the Barrier Treaty, which England gained at a prodigious expence of of blood and treasure. In the war of queen Anne, An. 1760. the k-of P-a, for a subsidy of fifty thousand pounds, furnished a considerable body of troops to oppose the French in Savoy. In the present war, the k--- of P--- a receives an annual payment of above thirteen times that fum, without supplying fo many regiments; a fum exceeding the whole amount of the subsidies granted in queen Anne's war to all her German allies put together; and this fum given to a prince who does not even oblige himself to yield any specific affistance in return. Far from fending troops to protect Hanover, he, after the ratification of the first treaty, withdrew his garrison from Wesel, of which the French took immediate poffession. The sum given, therefore, feems calculated not to fecure his aid, but to purchase his forbearance; and this is strictly the defi-

Having shewn the absurdity of supposing that Great Britain was obliged, either by promise or treaty, to profecute measures so pernicious to her allies, and destructive to her own interest. he adduces many arguments to prove that England's perfifting to carry on the war in Germany is in itself ruinous, and will be found impracticable. He observes, that in this war Britain flands fingle, and alone, to contend with France by land, where it is impossible she should be a match. for her antagonist. It was, during the last fession of parliament, declared in the house of commons. by a member, who, from the nature of his office, ought to understand the subject, that the standing revenue of France amounted to twelve millions, five of these being anticipated, and the remaining

nition of a tribute.

t

T -

feven

An. 1760. feven subject to any deficiences in the other five: besides, the state has borrowed two millions; so that their whole fund for carrying on the war is equal to nine millions sterling. The standing revenue of England, confifting of the land and malt taxes, amounts to two millions feven hundred and fifty thousand pounds; to which may be added a million and an half from the finking fund, and these sums will constitute four millions. Over and above this revenue, the state hath borrowed twelve millions for the service of the year. Let the same plan be pursued two years longer, France will owe fix millions, and England thirty-fix. The English navy for this year, costs five millions fix hundred thousand pounds, though never employed in any actual service: France equipped no fleet during the course of this year; so that the difference of expence, in this particular, reduces the funds of the two nations, with respect to the land war, to nine and ten millions. If we consider the expence of transporting men and horses from England to Germany, the fleet of transports to be kept in readiness for all cases of emergency, the difference between French and English pay, the facility which the French have in recruiting and maintaining their forces; we must allow, that their nine millions are more than equal to England's. ten; and that, on the present plan of the war, their ordinary revenue of feven millions will enable them to bring a greater number of men into the field, without borrowing at all, than Great Britain can afford, by running every year eight millions in debt. He takes notice, that a war of defence is much more difficult than a war of offence, An. 1760. because it is almost impossible to defend a large extent of country from an enterprising enemy of fuperior number: that the French have every year brought a superiority of number into the field, and every summer penetrated into Hesse and part of Hanover: that whatever force England may fend into Germany, France will always fend a greater, because her troops are much more numerous: that while England, by running yearly ten or twelve millions in debt, is barely able to maintain an army of ninety-five thousand men in Germany, France, with very little addition to her ordinary expence, can pour one hundred and twenty thousand men into the same country; consequently may protract the war until the credit of Britain shall be intirely bankrupt, as it is profecuted in a country where victory can do the English little good, and where a defeat can do the French little harm. Should they lose one battle, instead of maintaining their ground on the Weser, they will retreat to the Mayne; that is, to a greater distance from England, and so much nearer to their own country, Should the British army obtain a second victory, perhaps their enemies might repass the Rhine into France, where furely the English would not be so mad as to follow them, or undertake the reduction of their fortified frontier: they would therefore be recruited and reinforced, and return in the next campaign with superior numbers: but, should the fate of battle turn against the British arms, they would be obliged to retreat until cut off from all communication with the fea; and, as they could L 3 peither

An. 1760.

neither be recruited nor reinforced, must at the long run submit to a capitulation. With respect to the loss of men, France never maintained a more innocent war; and all the advantages gained over them in Germany have ferved only to prevent their reduction of Hanover; but no decifive stroke hath been struck against them: for, though they have retreated for the present, they have returned every fucceeding campaign with redoubled vigour. What purpose, therefore, can be answered by the profecution of fuch a war, but the devastation of the territories belonging to the British allies, the accumulation of an enormous debt on the shoulders of Great Britain, and a deplorable flaughter of her bravest sons, whose lives have been squandered away with the most favage profusion, under the direction of a foreigner, whom England could not punish, or call to account, even though he had (which furely is not the case) made the most infamous use of the power and authority with which he was vefted? Should Britain, by an extraordinary effort, and contracting an additional debt of twenty millions, be able to fend a superior force into Germany, while the French are retired into their own country, this would undoubtedly be the consequence: the enemy would remain at home for that year, and, by faving their troops and their money, provide a better fund for the enfuing campaign, when England would be exhaufted. At this rate, whatever the fuccess of England may be in Germany, France can never be effectually injured by them: on the contrary, it will be her interest to keep alive the war in that quarter, as the most TOTAL TOTAL most effectual and infallible means of weakening An. 1760. the finews of her great rival.

After having farther discussed the merits of his P--n m--y, respecting Great Britain, deduced from his conduct towards her, both in the past and prefent war, the author proceeds to investigate that great political question, whether Britain ought to have any continental connections? He determines in the affirmative. He observes, that France is the only enemy upon the continent by which Britain can be endangered; and allows, that whenever the other nations of Europe will unite effectually in a war against France, it will then be the interest of England to join in that alliance; but to interfere as a party, or rather as an incendiary, in every quarrel between German princes, to take up the cudgels herself, and contract enormous debts by borrowing money to pay them for fighting their own quarrels, is fuch an abfurdity in politics as one would think no nation could avow. He fays, if king William III. instead of placing himself at the head of Europe, and uniting the feveral states of it in arms against France, had constituted himself the chief of a German party, formed petty connections in that country, and involved Great Britain in the internal broils of the empire, the French monarch might have thanked him for adhering to such a wretched fystem, which no other power of Europe would have joined him in supporting. All the treasures of England, in that case, had been expended to no purpose; and in the mean time Europe would have been enflaved. A clamour was raised against that prince, charging him with having Anazoto, having involved the nation in a ruinous land war: whereas the whole fum granted by parliament for the faid fervice amounted to no more than two millions three hundred eighty thousand fix hundred and ninety eight pounds, destined for the maintenance of the forces in England and Ireland. of fix thousand Danes hired for the recovery of Ireland, and for the English proportion of the grand alliance*. Of this fum not above one hundred thousand pounds were payed in subsidies among the German princes, who maintained four different armies of forty and fifty thousand men each on the frontiers of France. In those days England payed her money by thousands, to arm the whole empire against the dangerous ambition of the French monarch: whereas she now sends to Germany by millions, without having any allies but fuch as she hires as mercenaries at an exorb'tant price, or enables by tributary fublidies to maintain a civil war in the bowels of the empire. In the year one thousand seven hundred and six,

 For payment of her majesty's proportion of the subsidies to be paid to her al- 	Troan D	S.	130
lies for part of her quota of 40000 men:	55,272	00	0
To the king of Denmark,	37,500	00	0
To the landgrave of Hesse Cassel,	111,848		0
To the elector of Treves,	5,424		0
To the flates of Suabia,	31,642
To the elector Palatine,	712		0
To M. Moncado, for loss of waggons and hor			0
To the marquis Miremont,	400		0
ve been endaved. A clamour was	151,298	00	•
Contract to the second of the	-	_	7.1

the whole expence of the land army, including all the * Subsidies payed by Great Britain, and her quota An. 1760. of troops employed in the common cause, did not exceed two millions eight hundred fourteen thoufand five hundred and eighty-three pounds fifteen fhillings and nine pence. The French were opposed by different armies of the allies in Portugal. Spain, Italy, Savoy, Germany, and Flanders: they loft twenty thousand men at the battle of Ramillies; and a whole army, with half a million of treasure, at the siege and battle of Turin. For this expence of about two million eight hundred thoufand pounds, advanced by England, the allies were induced to bring two hundred thousand men into the field: but England has this year expended more than double that fum in Germany, without being able to produce half the number.

the

Our sensible author, in the next place, considers that maxim which has been so strongly inculcated on the public; namely, that the war in Germany is a diversion in favour of the English. He denies that it is a diversion either of the forces, or of the treasures of France. The French forces are employed in a German war; but by no means diverted from any other service by which they could of Europe; coalequently one	of the continent

* To the king of Denmark	37,500 00 0
To the king of Portugal,	150,000 00 0
To the duke of Savoy,	160,000 00 0
To the landgrave of Heffe Caffel,	5,952 7 6
To the elector of Treves, : 200000	5,852 7 6
To the elector Palatine,	4,761 18 6
To the king of Prussia,	50,000 00 0
and the state of the state of the state of	ne with the constraint of the

414,066 13 6

annoy

An. 1760. annoy the English. They may affemble troops on the coast opposite to England; but they have neither ships to transport them, nor a fleet to protect them in their passage. Could they find means to throw over ten thousand men by ftealth, or even double that number, what reason could Britain have to fear fuch an invasion, were those national troops, which she now maintains in Germany, to the amount of five and twenty thousand men, encamped or cantoned on the fouthern coast of England, ready to be reinforced by the rest of the regular forces and the militia of Great Britain? Could fuch a descent he effected in spite of all the difficulties attending it, which appear almost infurmountable while the English are masters at sea; the invaders must infallibly be defeated, and even obliged to furrender at discretion : but, granting fuch an attempt was practicable, it would not furely be prevented by their profecuting the war in Germany.

The army of France in time of war does not fall fhort of three hundred thousand men. About one hundred and twenty thousand are employed in Germany: they have no other enemy to oppose on the continent of Europe; consequently one hundred and eighty thousand men remain inactive, and one half of these idle men would be more than sufficient to invade Great Britain with a good prospect of success: they are not therefore in want of troops; but destitute of the means of conveyance; an undeniable proof that a German war is not a diversion of the French forces. Neither can it be deemed a division of their their treasure ; because their treasure could not An. 1760. be employed fo effectually elsewhere in the annoyance of Great Britain. They were very fenfible of the advantages they derived from their colonies in the East and West Indies, and justly confidered them as the great fource of their wealth, and the chief support of their marine. They knew that these settlements could not be protected against England, without a formidable fleet and a great number of transports, to waft over occasional fuccours and fupplies. If we, therefore, suppose the French ministry governed by the dictates of true policy, or indeed of common fense, they would have converted their treasure and their whole endeavours to this, as the most important object that could engage their attention, had they not found the talk altogether impracticable. Their ships were detained in English ports; their sailors in English prisons. Their fishery was destroyed: their navigation at an end; and all their principal harbours, both in Europe and America, were blocked up by the squadrons of Great Britain. They might perhaps purchase ships from the Swedes, Danes, or Genoese; but as the sea is covered with English cruifers, and their ports are beset by the squadrons of this nation, they would find it a very difficult talk to assemble a navy; and should they fucceed in this particular, their ships must rot in the harbour; for ships can be of no service without feamen; and feamen cannot be made but by the practice of navigation. In the beginning of the war, while there was any possibility of supporting their marine, they attended to this object with

An.1760. the most assiduous care; and while there was any reasonable prospect of invading England, never dreamed of marching into Germany. The electorate of Hanover was fo far from being thought in danger, that a body of its troops were brought over for the defence of England. In the fequel, when France perceived that Britain was prepared against infult; that her own navy was destroyed. and her colonies in danger of being conquered: then the bethought herfelf of Germany; and it was she in fact that made the diversion in this country; and the German war was, on the part of England, not a war of diversion, but a war of defence, in favour of a barren electorate, which if put up to fale, would not fetch one half of the money which is yearly expended in its behalf; for the protection of a country which cannot be protected, whose inhabitants are rendered miserable by the affistance which they receive; and for the support of an ally from whom no mutual fervice can be expected. On the other hand, had one third part of the fums expended in Germany. been employed in giving additional vigour to the naval armaments of Great Britain, France by this time would not have had one fettlement left in the West Indies: all the profits of her external commerce must have ceased, and she must have been absolutely obliged to accept such terms of peace as England should think proper to impose. Nay, without any fuch additional reinforcement, this consequence must have ensued from a spirited use of that armament which loitered inactive at Portsmouth, until the season for action was elapsed. Should Should Britain perfift in throwing her ineffectual An. 1760. shield before Hanover, it will be the fignal for France to make that electorate the feat of war in every future quarrel. It will be giving up all the advantages of an infular fituation, and, as it were, chaining Great Britain to the continent, from which she is so happily severed by mature. It is renouncing her naval superiority, and leaving her enemy the choice of a field where discomfiture can do them little harm, and where she herself must be infallibly exhaufted, even by a fuccession of her own victories. Three fuch victories as those of Crevelt, Minden, and Warbourg, though obtained in the course of one campaign, could have little or no effect in bringing the war to a termination. The French army would retire to their own territories, and be ready to invade the electorate early in the next campaign. If France, therefore, can maintain the war for little more than the amount of its annual revenue, it can hardly be expected that the will fue for peace these ten years; before the expiration of which period the national debt of Great Britain will exceed two hundred millions. should it continue to increase eight millions annually. This we conceive to be a very moderate calculation, confidering that above fourteen millions were borrowed for the fervice of the present year; and certainly it must afford very melancholy reslections to every lover of his country, who confiders that the British manufactures cannot possibly bear the load of fuch an augmented interest; and that national bankruptcy must be productive of horror, confusion, anarchy, and ruin.

The

An. 1760.

The parliament being affembled on the eighteenth day of November, the king appeared in the house of lords, seated on the throne, and the commons attending as usual, he harangued both houses to this effect:

The king's first speech in parliament.

"My lords and gentlemen,

"The just concern which I have felt in my own breast, on the sudden death of the late king, my royal grandsather, makes me not doubt, but you must all have been deeply affected with so severe a loss. The present critical and difficult conjuncture has made this loss the more sensible, as he was the great support of that system, by which alone the liberties of Europe, and the weight and influence of these kingdoms can be preserved, and give life to measures, conducive to those important ends.

"I need not tell you the addition of weight which immediately falls upon me, in being called to the government of this free and powerful country at such a time, and under such circumstances. My consolation is in the uprightness of my own intentions, your faithful and united assistance, and the blessing of heaven upon our joint endeavours, which I devoutly implore.

"Born and educated in this country, I glory in the name of Briton; and the peculiar happiness of my life will ever consist in promoting the welfare of a people, whose loyalty and warm affection to me, I consider as the greatest and most permanent security of my throne; and I doubt not, but their steadiness in those principles will equal

"equal the firmness of my invariable resolution to An. 1760. "adhere to, and strengthen, this excellent consti"tution in church and state; and to maintain the "toleration inviolable. The civil and religious "rights of my loving subjects are equally dear to "me with the most valuable prerogatives of my "crown: and, as the surest foundation of the "whole, and the best means to draw down the divine favour on my reign, it is my fixed purpose to countenance and encourage the practice "of true religion and virtue.

"I reflect, with pleasure, on the successes with which the British arms have been prospered this last summer. The total reduction of the vast province of Canada, with the city of Montreal, is of the most interesting consequence, and must be as heavy a blow to my enemies, as it is a conquest glorious to us; the more glorious, because effected almost without effusion of blood, and with that humanity which makes an amiable part of the character of this nation.

"Our advantages gained in the East Indies have been signal; and must greatly diminish the strength and trade of France in those parts, as well as procure the most solid benefits to the commerce and wealth of my subjects.

"In Germany, where the whole French force has been employed, the combined army, under the wife and able conduct of my general prince Ferdinand of Brunswick, has not only stopt their progress, but has gained advantages over them, notwithstanding their boasted superiority, and their not having hitherto come to a general engagement.

HISTORY OF ENGLAND.

An. 1760.

"My good brother and ally, the king of Pruf-"fia, although furrounded with numerous armies of enemies, has, with a magnanimity and perfeverance almost beyond example, not only with-

" flood their various attacks, but has obtained

" very considerable victories over them.

" Of these events I shall say no more at this time, es because the nature of the war in those parts has

" kept the campaign there still depending.

"As my navy is the principal article of our na-

" receive it in such good condition; whilst the " fleet of France is weakened to such a degree, that

" the small remains of it have continued blocked

" up by my ships in their own ports; at the same " time the French trade is reduced to the lowest

" ebb; and with joy of heart I fee the commerce

" of my kingdoms, that great fource of our riches, and fixed object of my never-failing care and " protection, flourishing to an extent unknown in " any former war.

"The valour and intrepidity of my officers and forces, both at sea and land, have been distin" guished so much to the glory of this nation, that I " should be wanting in justice to them, if I did not " acknowledge it. This is a merit which I shall constantly encourage and reward; and I take this contrainty encourage and reward; and reake this coccasion to declare, that the zealous and useful

" fervice of the militia, in the present arduous con-

" juncture, is very acceptable to me.

"In this state I have found things at my accesfion to the throne of my ancestors: happy, in viewing the prosperous part of it; happier still findly

" should I have been, had I found my kingdoms, An. 1760. " whose true interest I have entirely at heart, in " full peace: but fince the ambition, injurious " encroachments, and dangerous defigns of my " enemies, rendered the war both just and neces-" fary, and the generous overture, made last win-" ter, towards a congress for a pacification, has " not yet produced any suitable return, I am de-" termined, with your chearful and powerful affift-" ance, to profecute this war with vigour, in order " to that defireable object, a fafe and honourable " peace. For this purpose, it is absolutely incum-" bent upon us to be early prepared; and I rely " upon your zeal and hearty concurrence to fup-" port the king of Prussia, and the rest of my al-" lies, and to make ample provision for carrying " on the war, as the only means to bring our ene-" mies to equitable terms of accommodation.

" Gentlemen of the house of commons,

"The greatest uneasiness which I feel at this time, is in considering the uncommon burthens, necessarily brought upon my faithful subjects. I desire only such supplies as shall be requisite to prosecute the war with advantage; be adequate to the necessary services; and that they may be provided for in the most sure and effectual manner. You may depend upon the faithful and punctual application of what shall be granted. I have ordered the proper estimates for the ensuring year to be laid before you; and also an account of the extraordinary expences, which, Numb. 34.

An, 1760. " from the nature of the different and remote "operations, have been unavoidably incurred.

"It is with peculiar reluctance that I am obliged, at such a time, to mention any thing which personally regards myself. But, as the grant of the greatest part of the civil list revenues is now determined, I trust in your duty and affection to me, to make the proper provision for supporting my civil government with honour and dignity. On my part, you may be affured of a regular and becoming economy.

" My lords and gentlemen,

"The eyes of all Europe are upon you. From your resolutions the protestant interest hopes for protection, as well as all our friends for the preservation of their independency; and our enemies fear the final disappointment of their ambitious and destructive views. Let these hopes and fears be confirmed and augmented by the vigour, unanimity, and dispatch of our proceedings.

"In this expectation I am the more encouraged, by a pleasing circumstance, which I look upon as one of the most auspicious omens of my reign. That happy extinction of divisions, and that union and good harmony which continue to prevail amongst my subjects, afford me the most agreeable prospect. The natural disposition and wish of my heart, are to cement and promote

"them; and I promise myself that nothing will arise on your part to interrupt or disturb a situa-

" tion

" tion so essential to the true and lasting felicity of An. 1760, this great people."

The king, in passing from the palace of St. James's to St. Stephen's chapel, was faluted by innumerable crowds of people, who rent the air with acclamation, and feemed to be transported to a very unufual pitch of loyalty and affection; and those who faw what paffed in the house of peers were deeply affected with the scene. Their ears had been long accustomed to foreign accents from the throne; a circumstance at all times ungracious to an English ear: they could not therefore unmoved behold it filled with an amiable prince, born and educated among them, with an open ingenuous countenance, expressing sentiment and benevolence; but when they heard him declare himself a Briton, in the warmest terms of self-gratulation; when they heard him pronounce his oration in a clear melodious tone of voice, with all the graces of elocution, they could not help thinking themfelves under the illusion of an agreeable dream: they were hurried back, in idea, to the favourite æras of their admired Edwards and Henrys; and many were melted into tears of tenderness and joy. These raptures, howsoever general and interesting, did not hinder some individuals from regretting certain expressions contained in this popular harangue: they took exceptions to the declared intention of supporting a continental war; and were forry to hear the hackneyed pretence of the protestant interest repeated by a prince, who had so little occasion to use any disputable plea with a people

An. 1760. people by whom he was fo warmly beloved: but this they imputed to the force of habit in certain counsellors, who had adopted these maxims of statepolicy under the auspices and example of a former administration.

> In the beginning of every new reign all the members of both houses being obliged by law to take the oaths again, this ceremony was performed in both houses, according to the usual form, as foon as the king retired: then each prepared an address, replete with the most endearing expresfions of loyalty and affection, and reverberating every paragraph as it proceeded from the throne. As the substance of both was similar, or rather the fame, it will be sufficient to repeat the address of the commons, which ran in the following strain.

" Most gracious sovereign,

"We your majesty's most dutiful and loyal sub-" jects, the commons of Great Britain in parlia" ment affembled, approach your royal prefence,

" to express the deepest sense of the great and se-

" yere loss, which your majesty, and these kingdoms, have fustained by the death of your ma" jesty's royal grandfather, our late most excellent

" fovereign; the memory of whose just and pro-

" fperous reign will be held in reverence by latest o posterity.

"We beg leave to congratulate your majesty on your happy accession to the throne, the only

" confideration that can alleviate our grief for fuch a lofs. The knowledge of your majefty's royal virtues, wisdom, and firmnels, opens to your " faith-

"faithful subjects the fairest prospect for their future happiness at home, and for the continuance of that weight and influence of your majesty's crown abroad, so essentially necessary, in this arduous and critical conjuncture, for the preser" vation of that system, upon which the liberties

" of Europe depend.

"We return your majesty our humble thanks " for your most gracious speech from the throne; " and acknowledge, with the liveliest fentiments " of duty, gratitude, and exultation of mind, those " most affecting and animating words of our most " gracious fovereign. That, Born and Educated " in this country, he glories in the name of Bri-" ton. And we offer to your majesty the full tri-" bute of our hearts, for the warm expressions of " your truly royal and tender affection towards " your people. We venerate, and confide in. " those facred affurances of your majesty's firm " and invariable resolution to adhere to, and " ftrengthen, this excellent conflitution in church " and state; to maintain the toleration inviolate: " and to protect your faithful subjects in that " greatest of human bleffings, the secure enjoy-" ment of their religious and civil rights.

"Permit us to congratulate your majesty on the various successes, which, under the protection of God, have attended the British arms, during the last summer; particularly in the reduction of Montreal, and the entire province of Canada; a conquest equally important and glorious, atchieved with intrepidity, and closed with humanity, the genuine attributes of that British spirit,

M 3 "which,

An. 1760. " which, under the benign auspices of your majes" ty, will, we trust, continue, by the divine assist" ance, to give additional luftre to the arms of

" Great Britain.

"This valuable and extensive acquisition, joined

" to the fignal, advantages gained in the East In" dies; the flourishing state of our commerce;

" the respectable condition of your majesty's na" vy, by which the remains of the enemy's fleet continue blocked up in their harbours, whilst

" their trade is almost annihilated; are considera" tions which fill our hearts with the most pleasing

" hopes, that your majesty will be thereby en" abled to prolecute this just and necessary war, to

" that great and desireable object of establishing,

" in conjunction with your allies, a safe, honour-

" able, and lafting peace.

"We see, with the greatest pleasure, that the progress of the French armies in Germany,

" notwithstanding their superiority of numbers,

" has been stopt, and, to the honour of your ma" jesty's arms, their attempts hitherto baffled, by the wife and able conduct of his ferene highness

" prince Ferdinand of Brunswick.

"When we consider the stupendous efforts, made, in every campaign, by your majesty's great ally, the king of Prussia, the defeat of the " Austrians in Silesia, and that recent and glorious victory obtained over the army commanded by marshal Daun, we cannot sufficiently admire the invincible constancy of mind, and inexhaustible

" refources of genius, displayed by that magna-to nimous monarch, to whom the most dangerous

" and

and difficult fituations have only administred An. 1760:

"Our most dutiful acknowledgments are due to your majesty for the mention which you have so graciously made of the distinguished valour and intrepidity of your officers and forces at sea and land, and for the declaration of your majesty's constant resolution to encourage and reward such merit; and we return our most humble thanks to your majesty for your favourable acceptance of the zealous and useful service of the militia, in the present arduous conjuncture.

"We affure your majesty, that your faithful " commons, thoroughly fensible of this impor-" tant crisis, and desirous, with the divine assist-" ance, to render your majefty's reign successful " and glorious in war, happy and honourable in " peace (the natural return of a grateful people " to a gracious and affectionate fovereign) will " concur in such measures as shall be requisite for " the vigorous and effectual profecution of the " war; and that we will chearfully and speedily " grant fuch supplies as shall be found necessary " for that purpole, and for the support of the king " of Pruffia, and the rest of your majesty's allies: " firmly relying on your majesty's wisdom, good-" ness, and justice, that they will be applied in " fuch a manner as will most effectually answer " the ends for which they are granted, and with " the utmost economy that the nature of such " great and extensive operations will allow; and " that we will make fuch an adequate provision M 4 " for

An. 1760. " for your majesty's civil government as may be "fufficient to maintain the honour and dignity of "your crown with all proper and becoming "lustre.

"Your majesty's faithful commons approach " your royal person with hearts penetrated by the warmest and liveliest sense of your unbounded tenderness and concern for the welfare of your " people; and rejoicing at the high fatisfaction " your majesty takes in the union which so uni-" verfally prevails throughout your kingdoms: a " deep fense of that national strength and prospe-" rity visibly derived from this falutary fource, and, above all, your majesty's approbation of " that happy union, and the natural disposition " and wish of your royal heart to cement and promote it; are the strongest incentives to concord, and the furest pledge of its duration. "The fixt resolution, which your majesty has de-" clared, to countenance and encourage the prac-" tice of true religion and virtue, will, we doubt " not, prove the best means of drawing down the " favour of God upon a dutiful and united nation : " and we shall never cease devoutly to offer up our " ardent vows to the Divine Providence, that, as " a recompence for these royal virtues, your ma-" jesty may reign in the hearts of a free and hapof py people; and that they, excited by your ma-" jesty's benevolent care to discharge your royal s function, and animated by gratitude for the enjoyment of fo many bleffings, may make the due return, by a constant obedience to your " laws, and by the most steady attachment and An. 1760.

" loyalty to your person and government."

The commons, not content with this manifestation of their love and attachment, agreed to a fecond address of thanks for the gracious manner in which the first had been received by his majesty. Even before they had established the orders and resolutions renewed at the beginning of every seffion, they proceeded to take this speech into confideration. A motion being made that a fupply should be granted to his majesty, the house re- the civil folved itself into a committee, agreed to the mo- lift. tion, and immediately established the committee of fupply, which was continued to the fixth day of March. It was in pursuance of their resolutions, that the commons of England granted for the support of his majesty's houshold, and of the honour and dignity of the crown, during his life, fuch a revenue as, together with the annuities payable by virtue of any acts of parliament made in the reign of the late king, out of the hereditary civil lift revenues, should amount to the clear yearly fum of eight hundred thousand pounds, to commence from the demise of his late majesty; to be charged upon, and made payable out of the aggregate fund. At the same time they resolved, that the feveral revenues payable to his late majesty, during his life, which continued to the time of his demife (other than fuch payments as were charged upon, and iffuing out of the aggregate fund) should be granted and continued from the time of the faid demise, to his present majesty dur-

An. 1760. ing his life; and the produce of the faid revenues. together with the produce of the hereditary revenues, which were fettled, or appointed, towards the support of the late king's houshold, should be, during the faid term, added to and confolidated with the aggregate fund.

Number of feamen and foldiers voted for the fervice of the year 2761.

They voted feventy thousand men for the fervice of the ensuing year, including eighteen thousand three hundred and fifty-five marines: and a fum not exceeding four pounds per man per month, for their maintenance, including the ordnance for fea-fervice, the whole amounting to three millions fix hundred and forty thousand pounds. They resolved, that a number of landforces, amounting to fixty-four thousand nine hundred and seventy-one effective men, should be employed for the fervice of the same year; and that the fum of one million five hundred and seventyfix thousand nine hundred and eighty-five pounds ten shillings and seven-pence, should be granted for the maintenance of these men for guards and garrisons, and other land-forces in Great Britain, Guernsey, and Jersey. They granted nine hundred thirty-eight thousand eight hundred and thirty-two pounds fix shillings and eleven-pence, for the maintaining the forces at the garrifons in the plantations, Gibraltar, Guadalupe, Africa, the East Indies, Nova Scotia, Providence, Quebec, and Newfoundland; for defraying the charge of three foot regiments on the Irish establishment ferving in North America; as well as for the pay of general, staff officers, and officers of hospitals belo nging to the army.

They

They granted, for defraying the expence of the An. 1760. imbodied militia of the several counties in South Supplies Britain, of the Argyleshire fencible men, and lord granted. Sutherland's battalion of Highlanders in North Britain, for the term of one hundred and twentytwo days; and, on account, for defraying the charge of cloathing for the embodied militia for the enfuing year, the fum of one hundred ninetyfix thousand nine hundred and twenty-seven pounds fourteen shillings and fix pence. They allowed, for the charge of the office of ordnance, for the ensuing year, and for defraying the extraordinary expence of services performed by that office in the ensuing year, not provided for by parliament in the last session, the sum of seven hundred and twenty-eight thousand seven hundred and sixteen pounds thirteen shillings and eleven pence. They allotted one million nine hundred fifty-four thoufand seven hundred and ninety pounds seven shillings, for the ordinary of the navy, including halfpay to sea-officers, for the ensuing year; for compleating the works of the hospital for seamen, at Haslar near Gosport; and for carrying on another near Plymouth; for the transport service of the last and current year, including the expence of victualling his majesty's land-forces, between the first day of October in the preceding, and the thirtieth day of September in the present year; and towards discharging the debts of the navy, the building, rebuilding, and repairs of ships of war. They granted one million to enable his majesty to difcharge the like fum, raifed in pursuance of an act passed in the last session, and charged upon the first first aids or supplies granted in this; and they allotted fifteen thousand pounds to be applied towards the improving, widening, and enlarging the passage over and through London bridge. The fum of one million two hundred and thirtytwo thousand pounds was voted, to enable the king to pay off and discharge such Exchequer-bills as were made out before the eleventh day of December in the present year, by virtue or an act passed in the last session of parliament, enabling his majesty to raise a certain sum of money towards paying off and discharging the debt of the navy, &c. and charged upon the first aids or supplies to be granted in this fession. They granted four hundred fixty three thousand eight hundred and seventy four pounds nineteen shillings one penny one farthing, for defraying the charge of thirtynine thousand seven hundred and seventy-three men of the troops of Hanover, Wolfenbuttle, Saxe-Gotha, and count of Buckebourg, actually employed against the common enemy in concert, with the king of Prussia, for the service of the enfuing year, to be iffued in advance every two months; the faid body of troops to be mustered by an English commissary, and the effective roll thereof to be ascertained by the signature of the commander in chief of the faid forces. They allotted two hundred fixty eight thousand three hundred and fixty pounds eight shillings and eight pence, for defraying the charge of two thousand one hundred and twenty horfe, and nine thousand nine hundred infantry, together with the general and staff officers, and others, belonging to the train train of artillery, being the troops of the land- An. 1760. grave of Hesse Cassel in the pay of Great Britain, for the ensuing year, including the subsidy for the faid time, pursuant to treaty. They moreover granted one hundred forty-feven thousand seventyone pounds five shillings and two pence, for the maintenance of an additional corps of fifteen hundred and feventy-fix horse, and eight thousand eight hundred and eight infantry, likewise belonging to the same landgrave, in the pay of Great Britain, for the fervice of the next campaign. They gave fifty-feven thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight pounds fixteen shillings, for defraying the charge of twelve hundred and five cavalry. and two thousand two hundred and eight infantry. being the troops of the reigning duke of Brunswick in the pay of Great Britain, for the ensuing year, together with the subsidy for that time, purfuant to treaty; besides two thousand five hundred and fixty-nine pounds ten shillings, to make good a deficiency in the fum voted last fession of parliament for the charge of the troops of Brunswick. They likewife allowed twenty-five thousand five hundred and four pounds fix shillings and eight pence, for the charge of five battalions ferving with his majesty's army in Germany, each battalion confifting of one troop of one hundred and one men, and four companies of foot of one hundred and twenty-five men in each company, with a corps of artillery, for the ensuing campaign. They granted one million one hundred fixty-feven thousand nine hundred and three pounds twelve shillings and fix pence, for the extraordinary ex-

An. 1760.

pences

An. 1760. pences of his majesty's land-forces, and other fervices incurred, to the nineteenth day of November in the present year, and not provided for by parliament; as well as one million upon account, towards defraying the charges of forage, bread-waggons, train of artillery, provisions, wood, straw, and other extraordinary expences and contingencies of his majefty's combined army, under the command of prince Ferdinand of Brunswick. They voted fix hundred and feventy thousand pounds, to make good the engagements which the king of Great Britain had contracted with the Prussian monarch, pursuant to a convention concluded on the twelfth day of December in the present year. All these fupplies were granted before Christmas, within one month after the first estimates were laid before the house; a circumstance which denotes the accuracy and precision with which the public accounts are exhibited; for we cannot suppose that the representatives of the people would agree to any demands made by the ministers of the crown. until they had firifly examined every article of the estimate or account, upon which the demand was founded.

An. 1761.

The committee proceeded in the beginning of the year one thousand seven hundred and sixty-one, to complete what was left unfinished of the annual supply. They assigned one hundred twenty-seven thousand four hundred and four pounds nineteen shillings and eight pence half-penny, to replace in the sinking fund the like sums taken from thence to make good desiciencies in several duties on malt, offices, pensions.

fions, houses, and window lights; as well as in An. 1761. the fubfidy of poundage upon certain goods and merchandizes imported, and an additional inland duty on coffee and chocolate. They granted two hundred thousand pounds for enabling the king to give a proper compensation to the respective provinces in North America, for the expences incurred by them, in levying, cloathing, and paying the troops raifed by them, according as the active vigour and strenuous efforts of the respective provinces should be thought by his majesty to They indulged the East India company with twenty thousand pounds, towards enabling them to defray the expence of a military force in their fettlements, in lieu of a battalion removed from that fervice. Thirty-four thousand eight hundred and fifty-four pounds nine shillings and two pence were given on account of reduced officers for the enfuing year; two thousand nine hundred and feventy three pounds nineteen shillings and two pence as allowance for the officers and private men of two troops of horse-guards and a regiment of horse reduced; one thousand nine hundred and twenty-two pounds, for paying penfions to the widows of fuch reduced officers as died on the establishment of half-pay in Great Britain; eighteen thousand three hundred and fixty pounds two shillings and eleven pence, on account for out-pensioners of Chelsea-hospital; ten thousand five hundred and ninety-five pounds twelve shillings and nine pence, for maintaining the settlement of Nova-Scotia; and four thousand fifty-seven pounds ten shillings upon account,

An. 1761. count, for the civil establishment of Georgia. They granted nine hundred ninety-three thousand eight hundred and forty-four pounds four shillings four pence three farthings, for defraying the extraordinary expences of the land forces and other fervices, incurred in the course of the preceding year, and not provided for by parliament. They voted two hundred and fixty-eight thousand pounds, to enable his majesty to pay off and discharge such exchequer bills as had been made out fince the tenth day of last December, by virtue of an act passed in the last session on paying off the navy debt, and charged upon the first aids or supplies to be granted in this session. They allowed fifteen thousand pounds for defraying the charges of the king's mints, and the coinage of gold and filver monies, and other incidental charges; and thereby to encourage the bringing in of gold and filver to be coined, a revenue, not exceeding fifteen thousand pounds per annum, was fettled and fecured for feven years, commencing at the first day of next March. They refolved that forty-four thousand one hundred ninety-feven pounds ten shillings should be granted upon account, towards enabling the governors and guardians of the Foundling-hospital to maintain and educate fuch children as were received on or before the twenty-fifth day of March in the preceding year, to the last day of the present year; and they allotted thirteen thousand pounds to be employed in maintaining and supporting the fort of Anamaboe, and the other British forts and settlements on the coast of Africa. They allowed three

An. 1761. of the fupplies for the year

esporo-

three hundred thirty-fix thousand four hundred feventy-nine pounds fourteen shillings one penny Sum total and one half-penny for discharging the extraordinary expence of bread, forage, and fire-wood, furnished by the chancery of war at Hanover, in the year one thousand seven hundred and fifty- 1761. feven, and the following, to the Hessian and Prusfian forces acting in the army in Germany. They allowed three hundred twenty-one thousand and thirty pounds ten shillings and fix pence, for the difference of pay to a regiment, which, though on the Irish establishment, was in actual service; for feveral augmentations of the forces, fince the eftimates of the present year were presented to parliament; and in addition to what had been already granted for defraying the charge of the embodied militia of the feveral counties in South Britain. Seventy thousand pounds were granted, upon account, towards defraying the charge of the pay of the militia of England, when unembodied; and for cloathing part of the militia, now unembodied, for the present year. They assigned eighty-nine thousand five hundred and ten pounds twelve shillings and eleven pence, to make good the deficiency of the grants for the service of the preceding year; and they allotted thirty-eight thousand five hundred and fifty-three pounds twelve shillings one penny-farthing, upon account, for paying and discharging the debts and mortgages claimed and fustained upon the lands and estate which became forfeited to the crown by the attainder of Simon lord Lovat. They granted one million, upon account, for enabling his majesty to defray any extraordinary expences of the war, incurred, or to be incurred, for the service of the current year; and to take all fuch measures as might be necessary to disappoint or defeat any enterprizes or designs of the enemies, and as the exigency of affairs might require; and the fum of one hundred and twenty thousand pounds was given, on account, for affifting his majesty to grant a reasonable succour in money to the landgrave of Heffe Caffel. pursuant to treaty. The sum total of all the supplies granted for the fervice of the year one thoufand feven hundred and fixty-one, amounted to nineteen millions fix hundred fixteen thousand one hundred and nineteen pounds nineteen shillings nine pence three farthings. A fum which no man, who knows the value of money, can reflect upon without equal aftonishment and concern: a fum feemingly the last effort of a mighty nation to terminate a destructive war, which, however, produced nothing but a petty triumph, diffained with a vast effusion of British blood.

NUMB. XXXV.

An. 1761.

Funds appropriated.

This immense supply was raised by a continuation of the land and malt taxes, which constituted the standing revenue of the nation, and by borrowing the sum of twelve millions *, the interest

December 18. Resolved,

England, and redeemable by parliament; and that every contributor to the faid 11400000 l. shall also be intitled to an annuity of 1 l. 2 s. 6 d. for every 100 l. contributed, to continue, for a certain term of 99 years, irredeemable,

to

^{1.} That the sum of twelve millions be raised in manner following; that is to say, that the sum of 11400000 l. be raised by annuities, after the rate of 3 l. per cent. per ann. transferrable at the bank of

to be payed by an additional duty on beer and ale. By a continuation of the duties of ten shillings per deemable, and to be transferrable at the bank of England; the faid annuities of 3l. per cent. and 1l. 2s. 6d. per cent, to commence from the 5th day of January, 1761, and to be payable half-yearly, on the 5th day of July, and the 5th day of January, in every year; and that the fum of 600000l. be also raised, by a lottery, attendant on the faid annufties, the blanks and prizes whereof to be converted into like 31. per cent. transferrable annuities, at the bank of England, with the abovementioned 3l. per cent. annuities, to be payable in respect of the said 11400000l. the faid lottery annuities to be payable halfyearly, in like manner, to commence from the 5th of lanuary, 1762; and that, as well the faid 3 per cent. annuities, payable in respect of 11400000l. as the annuities payable in respect of the said 600000l. be added to, and made part of, the joint stock of 3 per cent. annuities, confolidated at the bank of England; that every fubscriber shall, on or before the 3d day of January next, make a deposit of 15l. per cent. on fuch fum as he shall choose to Subscribe towards the faid fum of 12 millions, with the cashiers of the bank of England, as a security for his making the future payments, on or before the times herein limited; that is to fay,

On the 12000000l.

f. 15 per cent. deposit, on or before the 3d day of January next, on the whole 12 millions.

On the 11400000l. in annuities.

£ 15 per cent. on or before the 28th day of February

10 per cent. on or before the 14th day of April next. 10 per cent. on or before the 27th day of May next. 10 per cent. on or before the 23d day of June next. 10 per cent. on or before the 31st day of July next. 10 per cent. on or before the 28th day of August

10 per cent. on or before the 25th day of September next.

10 per cent. on or before the 20th day of October

An. 1761. ton upon all wines, vinegar, cyder, and beer, imported into Great Britain, formerly granted by act of parliament for defraying the charges of the mint: by loans or exchequer-bills for one million five hundred thousand pounds, to be charged on the first aids to be granted in the next session of parliament: by a fum remaining in the receipt of the Exchequer, being part of ninety thousand

On the Lottery for 6000001.

£ 25 per cent. on or before the 21st day of March next.

30 per cent. on or before the 29th day of April

30 per cent. on or before the 15th day of July next.

Which feveral fums, fo received, shall, by the said cashiers, be paid into the receipt of his majesty's Exchequer, to be applied, from time to time, to fuch fervices, as shall then have been voted by this house, in this fession of parliament, and not otherwife; and that every fubscriber, who shall pay in the whole of his subscription to the faid 11400000l. on or before the 18th day of September, 1761, shall be allowed a discount, after the rate of 31. per cent. per ann. from the day fuch subscription shall be so completed, to the 20th day of October next; and that all fuch perfons, as shall make their full payments on the faid lottery, shall have their tickets delivered, as soon as they can conveniently be made out.

2. That an additional duty be paid for every barrel of beer, or ale, above fix shillings the barrel (exclusive of the duties of excise) brewed by the common brewer, or any other person or persons, who doth, or shall, sell, or tap out, beer or ale, publickly or privately, (to be paid by the common brewer, or by fuch other person or persons respectively) of three shillings, and fo proportionably for a greater or leffer quantity.

December 20.

That the annuities which shall be payable, in pursuance of a resolution of this house, of the 18th of this instant December, be charged upon the additional duties upon beer and ale, mentioned in a resolution of this house of the fame day, for which the finking fund shall be the collateral fecurity, 120000001.

pounds

pounds granted to the late king in the year one An. 1761. thousand seven hundred and fifty-nine, upon account, towards defraying the charge of the militia: by iffuing one million feven hundred fixtytwo thousand four hundred pounds from the finking fund. The whole of the provisions made in this fession, fell very little short of twenty millions sterling. This, which may be termed the giving parliament, increased annually in their grants from their fecond fession to their That the reader may have final diffolution. a fummary idea of their bounty, we shall inform him that this, the eleventh parliament of Great Britain, raised at different times upon the fubject, in the course of seven sessions, the sum of feventy-eight millions twenty thousand fix hundred and seventy-four pounds five pence one farthing *.

A man who reflects upon the vast disproportion Reflectibetween the fums now allotted for the annual fer- ons on vice of the nation, and those supplies which were the supgranted in the beginning of the century, for the maintenance of an extensive and successful war:

* No money	was granted	in the	first	feffion,	whic	h i	at
but a few days.	300000		1000	इत्रपात्रं हुई।
By the fecond	fession there	was gra	inted	4073779	11	6	1
By the third .	10			722911	7 4	6	1
By the fourth	PR distributes	-		8350325	9	3
By the fifth	peril appar	The The	head	10486457	0	1
By the fixth	le montel	oriz tire	hnol	12761310	19	5	7
By the feventl	h -			15503563	15	9	1
And, by the e	ighth and las	t -		19616119
0.707.704.000	THE PARTY		311		_	-	-

Sum total of the money granted by last } 78020674 0 5 3 parliament

when

An. 1761.

when he compares the operations of these two wars, and confiders that the pay and subfistence of armies and fleets was the fame in both; when he fees how little the value of money is changed in the course of fifty years, and finds the supply of the year one thousand seven hundred and fixtyone, confiderably more than three times as much as was ever granted in the reign of queen Anne, when half the potentates of Europe received fubsidies from Great Britain; in revolving these circumstances, he would find it impossible to account for the difference, without detracting in his own mind from the integrity, wisdom, or economy of It would, therefore, become the the ad---n. guardians of the constitution to appoint a select committee, in the beginning of every festion, to examine carefully the separate articles of the public accounts, in which it is very certain a thousand frauds may be concealed by the artifices of clerks and agents, actuated by undue influence.

Establishment of the civil list.

In the beginning of the fession, before the committee had taken the civil list into consideration, the king sent a message by the chancellor of the Exchequer, informing the house of commons, that, being ever ready and desirous to give the most substantial proofs of his tender regard to the welfare of his people, he was willing, that whenever the house should enter upon the consideration of making provision for the support of his household, and of the honour and dignity of the crown, such disposition might be made of his majesty's interest in the hereditary revenues of the crown, as might best conduce to the utility and satisfaction of the public. By the accounts laid before the An. 1761. house it appeared, that for the last thirty-three years the funds appropriated for railing the civil lift revenue, had, on the whole, fallen short of producing the annual fum of eight hundred thousand pounds: a circumstance the more surprising, as the civil lift revenue, immediately before the Union, produced at the rate of fix hundred ninetyone thousand two hundred and four pounds; and those revenues have been greatly increased since the union of the two kingdoms: for the new fubfidy of tonnage and poundage, which is one of the chief branches of the civil lift fund, as well as the hereditary and temporary excise, which is another, must have been considerably increased since the Union, by the confumption of East India and other goods in Scotland, which are always entered. and pay the new subsidy in England, as well as by the expence incurred by great numbers of the Scottish nobility and gentry who reside in England. At the accession of king George I, therefore, the civil lift revenues must have produced a great deal more than seven hundred thousand pounds per annum; and to this was added a certain and clear revenue of one hundred and twenty thousand pounds per annum out of the aggregate fund: which addition having been continued during the whole succeeding reign, the civil lift revenues, thus augmented, must either have confiderably exceeded the annual fum of eight hundred thousand pounds, or been greatly mismanaged in the collection. Be that as it may, the king now willingly accepted a certain provision of N4 eight

An 1761. eight hundred thousand pounds per annum, settled by act of parliament, in lieu of the former funds appropriated for the civil list revenue; and this consent was undoubtedly an instance of royal moderation, considering that this annuity is charged with sifty thousand pounds a year to his mother the princess dowager of Wales, sisteen thousand pounds per annum to the duke of Cumberland, and twelve thousand to the princess Amelia. After these deductions, his majesty touches no more than seven hundred and twenty-three thousand pounds annually, for the support of his riage.

Bills paff-

The bills founded on the resolutions of the committee of ways and means were regularly introduced, and passed into laws, according to the usual form, without any opposition or debate; for the whole house seemed to be actuated by the same fpirit of loyalty and condescension. The navy bill and the mutiny bill underwent the annual difcuffion as usual; and the provisions in this last, relating to the trial and punishment for mutiny and defertion of officers and foldiers in the fervice of the East India company, were by a new bill extended to the company's fettlement of Fort Marlborough, and to fuch other principal fettlements, wherein the company might be hereafter impowered to hold courts of judicature. Among other regulations, they protracted the law intituled "An act to continue, for a limited time, the importation of royal state, the subsistence of all his brothers and sisters, and the maintenance of that progeny which it is to be hoped will be the fruit of his mar-

of falted beef, pork, and butter from Ireland;" An. 176m because it was found conducive to the interest of Great Britain. In consequence of a message from the king, acquainting them that the South Sea company had intreated his majesty to become their governor, that he had complied with their request, and now defired the commons would confider of proper methods to render his compliance effectual. they passed a bill for that purpose, and it was enacted into a law, she of bedliane, revewed and ul

As the accession of a new king to the throne of Petitions Great Britain has been generally diftinguished by from confined debacts of grace in favour of debtors and delinquents, tors. petitions were now presented to the house of commons by persons confined for debt in the different gaols of London, the borough of Southwark, and other parts of the kingdom, explaining their miferable fituation, and imploring relief from the legislature. An act in behalf of these objects had generally passed in the first fession of every parliament; but they were now encouraged to hope for immediate relief, not only from the elevation and character of the new fovereign, but also from these other confiderations; that all the prisons in the kingdom were crouded; and many thousands of useful subjects lost to their country, at a time when the people were thinned by a cruel fanguinary war; and many branches of manufacture abandoned for want of labourers. The universal benevolence of the young monarch had even diffused a dawn of hope to those objects diftinguished by the term of crown-prisoners, of all other captives the most wretched and forlorn; inafmuch as they are indulged

An. 1761. dulged with no fort of allowance, and have no prospect of obtaining their liberty, except upon fuch an auspicious occasion. The same hope was extended to those unfortunate outlaws who were exiled from their country, for having obeyed the dictates of what they conceived to be their indifpensible duty, and embraced ruin in their endeavours to support a family which Providence seems to have devoted to destruction. All these fond illusions, however, vanished in disappointment and despair. By pardoning atrocious crimes, a monarch certainly injures the community he was born to protect. But an act of grace, framed under proper exceptions and restrictions, would undoubted. ly be an exertion of the royal prerogative, in which the generofity of the prince might happily coincide with the advantage of the people.

Act of infolvency.

To the cries of the debtors the legislature lent a favourable ear, and a bill in their behalf was brought into the house of commons. While they deliberated on this measure, an humble remonftrance was offered by the bankrupts confined within the prison of the King's Bench, representing the hardships to which they were exposed from a clause in the bill now depending, by which those unfortunate bankrupts, who had not obtained their certificates, would be excluded from the benefit of the act; and expressing their hope, that, as the legislature had hitherto judged other infolvents to be proper objects of favour, they should be no longer debarred the benefit of that mercy which their fellow-sufferers enjoyed. Little attention, however, was payed to this request; though we cannot see any good reason to distinguish, in the An. 1761. distribution of mercy, between a bankrupt, who has honeftly conformed to the statute, and any other kind of infolvent debtor. The bill, which was now passed into an act for the relief of these prisoners, contained a clause which indeed operates as a perpetual indulgence*. It imports, that as many persons too often choose rather to continue

* By the prefent infolvent act, no prisoner can take the benefit of it, that was not actually in custody before the 25th of October last; but those who were arrested before the faid 29th of October, and furrendered themselves before the 28th of Nov. last, may receive the benefit of this: also debtors who were beyond the feas on the fame 25th of October, furrendering themselves, may have the fame benefit. All perfons discharged by this act, are not liable to be arrested for debts contracted before the 25th of October. Bankrupts not obtaining their certificates in due time, are excluded in this All attorneys embezzling their clients money are also excluded. The future effects and estates of prisoners discharged, liable to their Debtors to the creditors. crown, and prisoners who owe above 1000l. to one perfon, unless the creditors confent, are excluded in this act; and creditors oppofing the prisoner's discharge, to allow him 3s. 6d. per week; on non-payment to be difcharged. All persons entitled to the benefit of this act, are to obtain their difcharges before the 31st of March, 1763. Creditors may compel any prisoner, charged in execution, to appear at the quarter-fession, with the copy of his detainer, and deliver in a schedule of his estate. and on his fubscribing the fame, and making a difcovery of his estate, he is to be discharged; on refusing so to do, or concealing to the amount of 201. fuffers as a felon. Prisoners upon process out of the courts of confcience are included in this act; and all who took the benefit of the act 28th George II. to be excluded. Mariners, and those who have been in the fea or land fervice, are upon their discharge, if under fifty years of age, and approved of, to ferve during

An. 1761: in prison, and spend their substance there, than discover and deliver up to their creditors their estates or effects, towards satisfying their just debts; the creditor may compel any prisoner, committed, or who shall hereafter be committed, and charged in execution, to appear at the quarter-sessions, with the copy of his detainer, and deliver, upon oath, a just schedule of his estate; that a prisoner, subscribing the schedule, and making a discovery of his estate, shall be discharged at the general or quarter sessions, under this act; and that on his re-twenty pounds, he shall suffer as a felon.

fufal fo to do, or concealing to the amount of Bad confequences of the compellingclaufe.

This compulfive clause was attended with a confequence, which, in all probability, the legislature did not foresee. Great numbers of tradesmen. and people in the lower classes of life, and even many who had moved in a superior sphere, were faid to have laid hold on this opportunity of difencumbering themselves from their debts, which might have been honestly payed by a proper exertion of industry and temperance. Every person, defirous of reaping the benefit of the act, prevailed upon some relation or friend to perform the part of compelling creditor. The public complained that the gaols about London were crouded with a fuccession of these voluntary captives; and that a great number of honest men were ruined by this indulgence shewn to their debtors by the clemency of parliament. Certain it is, the common council during the present war; and rested and imprisoned at the if they desert, may be ar-

of the city of London, in their instructions to their An. 1761. representatives in the new parliament, recommended to them to use their best endeavours to procure the repeal of this compulfive clause, as a manifest grievance to the public. That it is an encouragement to idleness and profligacy, and a strong temptation to fraud, in the minds of the vulgar, are truths which cannot be denied. At the same time we must consider, that the greatest national advantage may be attended with some inconvenience; that the advantage flowing from this clause is great and manifest, as it emancipates many citizens from the worst kind of slavery, prevents great numbers from abandoning their country, and reunites to the community many useful members, of whose talents and industry it would otherwise be totally deprived.

A bill was formed, and passed into a law, for Other extending to hog's lard and grease the late act to bills that discontinue, for a limited time, the duties payable the royal upon tallow imported from Ireland. They took affent. measures for continuing the act " For the better fecuring and encouraging the trade of his majesty's fugar-colonies in America," which was near expiring. A bill was prepared, and passed, enabling the king to make leafes, and copies of offices, lands and hereditaments, parcel of his dutchy of Cornwal, or annexed to the same, and for other purposes therein mentioned. Another was established for preventing frauds committed by perfons navigating small boats, with provisions and refreshments, upon the river Thames. This meafure was the effect of a petition, representing the received

An. 1761.

numerous thefts and robberies that were committed upon the river, to the great loss and detriment of merchants, owners of ships, vessels, and other crafts belonging to the port of London, as well as to the inhabitants and occupiers of wharfs, yards, and tenements adjoining to the river. The fanction of the legislature was also given to a bill for amending the law intituled, "An act to amend, and render more effectual, a former act for the further qualification of justices of the peace," fo far as it obliged those who had already taken and subscribed the qualification-oath, to take and subscribe the same again at the general or quarter session of the peace for the county, riding, or division, for which they intend to act in quality of justices. Earl Marischal of Scotland, who had so lately obtained his pardon, was now further indulged by the royal bounty: a fmall ballance on the purchase of one of his family estates, which had been forfeited in the year one thousand seven hundred and fixteen, remaining still unpaid to the government by the trustees of the purchaser, the earl presented a petition to the house of commons, expressing his hope that his present majesty would, in compassion to the fufferings of the petitioner, and the diffresses of his family, be graciously pleased to grant unto him, for his prefent support, what remained due to the crown of the purchase-money, provided his majesty was enabled fo to do by the authority of parliament: he therefore prayed, that leave might be given to bring in a bill for this purpole. The king reinforced this petition with a gracious meffage, fignified to the house by the chancellor of the Exchequer. The request was granted; and the An. 1761. bill being admitted, foon paffed into a law. In consequence of this favour, the earl, in his old age, retrieved about fix thousand pounds of his original fortune, which was valued at above fifty thousand pounds when he suffered attainder: but this wretched pittance being insufficient to maintain him in his own country, he found himself obliged to refide abroad; fo that he feemed to reap very little comfort from the pardon which he had been fo folicitous to obtain.

In the month of January the king fent a meffage Meffages to the commons, importing, that his majefty being from the fensible of the zeal and vigour with which his king to faithful fubjects in North America have exerted mons. themselves, in defence of his just rights and posfessions, recommended it to the house to take their fervices into confideration, and enable his majesty to give them a proper recompence for the expence incurred by the respective provinces in levying, cloathing, and maintaining the troops they had raised, according as the active vigour and strenuous efforts of the respective provinces should appear to merit. This intimation was referred to the committee of fupply; and that refolution taken in favour of the American provinces which we have mentioned above among the grants of the year. The royal message was likewise procured in favour of the East India company, for enabling them to defray the expence of a military force in India; and they were accordingly gratified with the fum already specified under that article. The sums which the commons granted for the support of

An. 1761. the Foundling hospital, and the further reparation of London bridge, were the refult of accurate inquiry. The parliament paffed feveral private bills for the naturalization of foreigners; and a good number relating to the improvement of highways. as well as of wastes or commons.

King's fpeech in favour of the judges.

In the beginning of March the king proposed a step for securing the independency of the judges, which could not fail to impress the subject with the most favourable opinion of his royal candour and In a speech from the throne he inmoderation. formed both houses of parliament, that, upon granting new commissions to the judges, the prefent state of their offices fell naturally under confideration: that notwithstanding the act passed in the reign of king William III. for fettling the fuccession to the crown, by which act the commissions of the judges were continued in force during their good behaviour; yet their offices had determined at the demife of the crown, or in fix months after that event, as often as it had happened: that as he looked upon the independency and uprightness of the judges as effential to the impartial administration of justice, one of the best securities to the rights and liberties of his subjects, as well as conducive to the honour of the crown, he recommended this interesting object to the consideration of parliament, in order that fuch further provision might be made for fecuring the judges in the enjoyment of their offices during their good behaviour, notwithstanding any such demise, as should be most expedient. He desired of the commons, in particular, that he might be enabled to grant, and

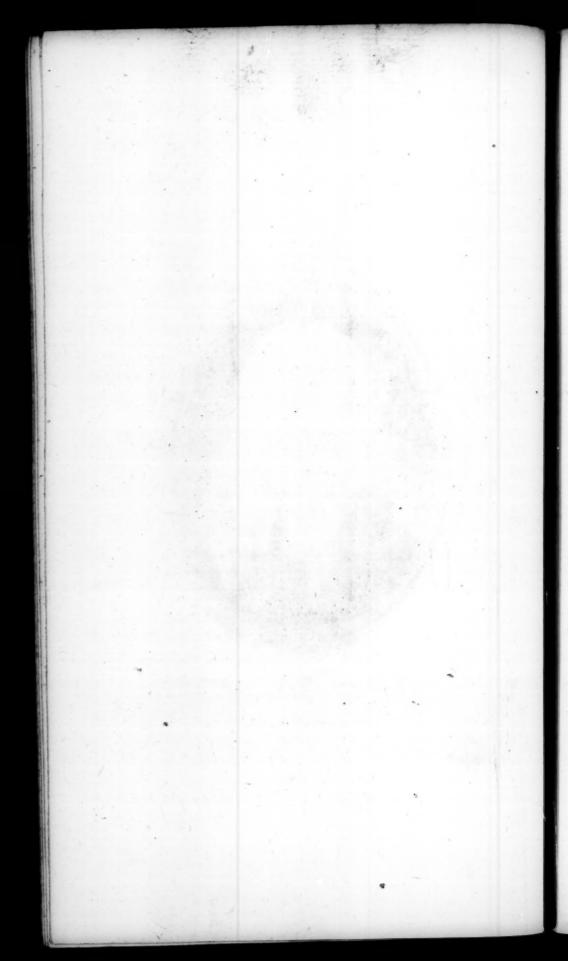

LORD Chief Justice WILLES.

ald

s,

it,

and establish upon the judges, such falaries as he An. 1761. should think proper, so as to be absolutely secured to them during the continuance of their commiffions. He thanked both houses for the great unanimity and application with which they had hitherto carried on the public business; exhorting them to proceed with the fame good disposition, and with fuch dispatch, that this fession might be brought to a happy conclusion.

The speech was received with that applause Resolutiwhich was due to fuch a declaration. The commons unanimously resolved to display their satisfaction in an address to the throne. They acknow- of that ledged the most grateful sense of his majesty's at- speech. tention to an object fo interesting to his people. They affured him, that his faithful commons faw with joy and veneration the warm regard and concern which animated his royal breaft for the fecurity of the religion, laws, liberties, and properties of his subjects; that the house would immediately proceed upon the important work recommended by his majesty with such tender care of his people; and would enable him to establish the salaries of the judges in fuch a permanent manner, that they might be enjoyed during the continuance of their commissions. They forthwith began to deliberate upon this subject; and their resolutions terminated in a law, importing, among other articles, That fuch part of the falaries of the judges as was before payable out of the yearly fums granted for . the support of the king's houshold, and of the honour and dignity of the crown, should, after the demise of his present majesty, be charged upon Numb. 35.

ons taken in confequence

and

An. 1761. and payable out of all or any such duties or revenues, granted for the uses of the civil government, as should subsist after the demise of his majesty, or of any of his heirs and successors. Thus the individuals, intrusted with the administration of the laws, were effectually emancipated from the power of the prerogative, and of all undue insuence.

King's meffage to the house of com-

It was also in the beginning of March that the chancellor of the Exchequer delivered a message from the king to the commons, couched in these terms: " His majesty, relying on the known zeal and affection of his faithful commons, and confidering that in this critical conjuncture emergencies may arife, which may be of the utmost importance, and be attended with the most pernicious confequences, if proper means should not be immediately applied to prevent or defeat them; is defirous that this house will enable him to defray any extraordinary expences of the war, incurred, or to be incurred, for the service of the year one thousand seven hundred and fixty-one; and to take all fuch measures as may be necessary to disappoint or defeat any enterprizes or defigns of his enemies. and as the exigency of affairs may require." The meffage was immediately referred to the confideration of the committee of supply; and his majesty was provided with one million, upon account, as we have specified above.

Honours conferred upon Mr. Onflow. Mr. Onflow, who had fo long filled the speaker's chair with dignity, capacity, and candour, having declared his intention to retire from business, in consequence of age, infirmities, and other motives of a private nature, the commons immediately An. 1761A honoured him with very diftinguishing marks of regard. They unanimously resolved, that the thanks of the house should be given to Mr. Speaker, for his constant and unwearied attendance in the chair, during the course of above thirty-three years, in five fuccessive parliaments; for the una shaken integrity and steady impartiality of his conduct there; and for the indefatigable pains he had, with uncommon abilities, constantly taken to promote the real interest of his king and country. to maintain the honour and dignity of parliament. and to preserve inviolable the rights and privileges of the commons of Great Britain. The venerable patriot was fo much affected by this proof of their love and esteem, that he could not answer, but in. broken fentences, burfting unconnectedly from a heart that swelled too big for easy utterance ...

For

* " I was never under fo great a difficulty in my life to know what to fay in this place, as I am at present-Indeed it is almost too much for me. - I can stand against misfortunes and distresses: I have stood against misfortunes and diffreffes; and may do fo again; but I am not able to fland this overflow, of good will and honour to me. It overpowers me; and had I all the strength of language, I could never express the full fentiments of my heart, upon this occasion, of thanks and gratitude. have been happy enough toperform any fervices here, that are acceptable to the house, I am fure I now receive the noblest reward for, them; the noblest that any man can receive for any merit, far superior, in my estimation, to all the other emoluments of this world. owe every thing to this house; I not only owe to this house, that I am in this place, but that I have had their constant support in it; and to their good will and affiltance, their 0 2

An 1761. For that reason his speech was the more agreeable to the house, who forthwith resolved, that thanks should be given to Mr. Speaker for what he now said; that his answer should be printed in the votes of the day; that an address should be presented to the king, humbly to beseech his majesty, that he would be graciously pleased to confer some signal mark of his royal favour upon the right honourable Arthur Onslow, esquire, speaker of their house, for his great and eminent services performed to his country, for the space of thirty-three years and upwards, during which he had with such distinguished ability and integrity presided in the chair; and to assure his majesty, that whatever expence he tenderness and indulgence towards me in my errors, it is, that I have been able to perform my duty here to any degree of approbation: thanks therefore are not so much due to me for these services, as to the house itself, who made them to be services in me.

here, I set out with a resolution, and promise to the house, to be impartial in every thing, and to shew respect to every body. The first I know I have done, it is the only merit I can assume: if I have failed in the other, it was unwillingly, it was inadvertently; and I ask their pardon, most sincerely, to whomsoever it may have happened.—I can truly say, the giving fatisfaction to all has been my constant aim, my study, and my pride.

" And now, Sirs, I am to take my last leave of you. It is, I confess, with regret, because the being within these walls has ever been the chief pleasure of my life: but my advanced age and infirmities, and fome other reasons, call for retirement and obscurity. There I shall spend the remainder of my days; and shall only have power to hope and to pray, and my hopes and prayers, my daily prayer, will be, for the continuance of the constitution in general, and that the freedom, the dignity, and authority of this house may be perpetual." amount lime and early upod this occution; of

An. 1761.

should think proper to be incurred upon that account, the house would make it good. This application was very agreeable to the king's own generous disposition. He expressed a proper sense of the speaker's great services and unblemished character; and he was gratified with an annual penfion of three thousand pounds, payable out of his majesty's treasure at the Exchequer, for his own life and that of his fon. All the business of the fession being dispatched, and all the bills having received the royal fanction, the king closed the fcene with a speech from the throne on the nineteenth day of March +. He afterwards dissolved the prefent, and iffued out writs for electing a new parliament.

The

you with the great progress made of late by the combined army in Germany, under the command of prince Ferdinand of Brunfwick. I formerly told you, that the nature of the war, in those parts, had kept the campaign there still depending; and it now appears, to the furprize of my enemies, that the superior ability and indefatigable activity of my general, and the spirit and ardour of my officers and troops, have greatly profited of this perseverance, notwithstanding all the difficulties arising from the season.

" By your affiftance, I have taken the best care to recruit that

t " My lords and gentlemen,

[&]quot; I cannot put an end to this fession, without declaring my entire satisfaction in your proceedings during the course of it. The zeal you have shewn for the honour of my crown, as well as for my true interest, and that of your country, which are ever the fame, is the clearest demonstration of that duty and affection to my person and government, of which you fo unanimously assured me at your first meeting. Nothing could so much add to the pleasure, which these considerations afford me, as that I am now able to acquaint

An. 1761.

The new tax laid upon beer excited loud clamours among the class of labouring people, especially that army, in an effectual manner; and have made such a disposition of my fleet, for the next summer, as may most advantageously defend my kingdoms, protect the commerce of my subjects, maintain and extend our possessions and acquisitions, and annoy the enemy.

"As in all my measures I have nothing in view but the fecurity and felicity of my dominions, the support of my allies, and the restoring of the public tranquillity, I trust in the divine Providence, to give a happy issue to our further operations.

"Gentlemen of the house of commons,

"I cannot sufficiently thank you for your unavimity, and dispatch, in providing for the expences of my civil government, and the honour and dignity of the crown: and I think myself as much obliged to you, for the prudent use, which, in framing that provision, you have made of my consent to leave my own hereditary revenues to such disposition of parliament, as might best conduce to the utility and satisfaction of the public, as for what more immediately concerns myfelf.

" In making my acknowledgments for the large and extensive supplies, which you have granted me this fession, I am at a loss, whether most to applaud your chearfulness in giving, or your wisdom in proportioning them to the extraordinary occasions of the public, notwithstanding those uncommon burthens, which I heartily regret. No care shall be wanting, on my part, to fee them duly applied to the national ends for which you intended them.

" My lords and gentlemen,

rathe expiration of this parliament now drawing very near, I will forthwith give the necessary orders for calling a new one. But I cannot take my leave of you, without returning my thanks for the many eminent proofs you have given of your fidelity and affection to my family and government, and of your zeal for this happy and excellent constitution.

"During this parliament, the flame of war was kindled by the injurious encroachments and usurpations of our enemies; and therefore it became

cially in the metropolis, where fome few publicans An. 1761. attempted to raise the price, in consequence of Popular this imposition: but, as they did not act in con- clamour cert, those houses in which the experiment was against made were immediately abandoned by their cuftomers. Menacing letters and intimations were beer. fent to some individuals, supposed to have advised the new duty. The streets resounded with the noise of vulgar discontent, which did not even refpect the young f ---- n, although the measure had been fettled before his accession to the th---e; and if the price of strong beer had been actually raised the new tax upon came just and necessary on our part. In the profecution of it you have given fuch support to my royal grandfather and myfelf, and fuch affiftance to our allies, as have manifested your publickspirited concern for the honour of the nation, and the maintenance of its undoubted rights and possessions, and been attended with glorious fuccesses, and great acquisitions, in various parts of the world; particularly in the entire reduction of Canada, a conquest of the utmost importance to the fecurity of our colonies in North America, and to the extension of the commerce and navigation of my subjects.

" May God Almighty grant continuance to thefe fuccesses! The use which I tante where an accutant

propose to make of them is, to fecure and promote the welfare of my kingdoms, and to carry on the war with vigour, in order to procure to them the bleffings of peace, on fafe and honourable conditions for me and my allies; to which I have been always ready to hearken.

" Firm in these resolutions, I do, with entire confidence, rely on the good dispositions of my faithful subjects in the choice of their representatives; and I make no doubt but they will thereby demonstrate the fincerity of those affurances, which have been fo cordially and univerfally given me, in the loyal, affectionate, and unanimous addresses of my peoAn. 1761. to the consumer, in all probability some dangerous tumult would have ensued.

The committee appointed to prepare an estimate of the pay of the militia of England, when unembodied, having duly deliberated on this subject, which was also recommended to their attention by a message from the throne, certain resolutions were formed; and these constituted the basis of a bill, which passed into a law, for applying the money granted in this session of parliament towards destraying the charge of the pay of the militia of that part of Great Britain called England, when unembodied, for one year, commencing at the twenty-sifth day of March *.

Not

* By this new militia law it is enacted, that within ten days after, that his majesty's lieutenant, or, in his abience, three deputy-lieutenants of any county, &c. where pay has not been iffued for the militia, shall have certified to the commissioners of the treafury, that three fifths of the number of private men of any regiment, battalion, or independent company of fuch county, &c. have been chosen and inrolled, and that the like proportion of commiffion-officers have been appointed, and have taken out their commissions, and entered their qualifications, as is by law required; they shall also certify the same to the receiver, or receivers-general of the land-tax for fuch county, &c. and shall also certify to fuch receivers-general, when any regiment, battalion, or independent company, that shall have been embodied and called out into actual fervice, shall be difembodied, and return home by order of their commanding officers, and thereby be no longer intitled to full pay; and the receivers-general, upon receipt of any fuch certificate, shall issue the whole fums required for the feveral uses herein after mentioned, viz. For the pay of the faid militia, for four months in advance, from the date of fuch certificate, at the rate of 6s. a day, for each adjutant, where an adjutant is Not a year passes without some furious commotion among the populace of England. As the militia in the northern counties had already served the term of three years, prescribed by law, it was necessary to ballot for a succession of men; and in the month of March the justices of the peace in the county of Northumberland were assembled at Hexham for this purpose. The common people being determined to oppose this regulation, as an insupportable grievance, assembled to the number of five thousand, of both sexes, and of all ages, some of them armed with clubs, and some with firearms. The justices, apprehensive of some such by this act allowed; 1s. a day for each ferjeant, with the addition of 2s. 6d. a week for each ferjeant-major, where a ferjeant-major is allowed; 6d. a day for each drummer, with the addition of 6d. a day for each drum-major, where a drum-major is allowed; 1s. for each private militia-man, with the addition of 6d. to each corporal, for every day in which fuch private militiaman or corporal shall be respectively employed in the militia; 2s. for each private militia-man, with the addition of 1s. to each corporal, for his march, on the Monday and Saturday in Whitfun week, to and from the place of general exercise; and also 5d. a month for each private man and drummer, for defraying the contingent expences of each regiment, battalion, or independent com. pany; half a year's fallary for the clerk of each regiment, or battalion, at the rate of 50l. a year; and for the allowances to the clerk of the general meetings, at the rate of 51. 5s. for each meeting; and to the clerks of the fub-division meetings, at the rate of 11. 1s. for each meeting; and also for the cloathing of the militia for fuch county, &c. where the militia hath not already been cloath. ed, at the rate of 11. 10s. for each private man, 2l. for each drummer, and 31. 10s. for each serjeant. All which issues or payments the receivers-general shall make, without any new or other certificate for that purpose."

An. 1761, Dangerous commotion at Hexham.

An. 1761.

neitom

at Hea-

.mad

disorder, had procured a battalion of the York. shire militia for their guard, and these were drawn up in the market-place. The populace being reinforced by a body of desperate keelmen from Newcastle, began to insult the guard with reproaches, miffiles, and even with blows, which the militia for some time sustained with all the temperance of perfect discipline. The riot-act was read, and the people were exhorted to retire to their respective habitations. But, instead of complying with this advice, they became more intractable. Encouraged by the forbearance of the militia, and poffeffed with a notion that they would not commit hostilities, they proceeded from one act of outrage to another; affaulted them as they flood arranged in order of battle, and with firearms killed an officer and a private foldier. Thus exasperated, the militia poured in upon them a regular discharge, by which forty-five of the populace were killed upon the spot, and three hundred miserably wounded. The survivors immediately betook themselves to slight, and many dropped down upon the road in their retreat. The most lamentable part of this disafter was a circumstance which attends all fuch unfortunate occafions: fome hapless women and children, drawn thither by curiofity, or the more laudable motive of persuading their husbands, parents, or kinsmen, to retire, were confounded and perished in the undiftinguishing vengeance of the day. Some of the rioters, being apprehended, were tried for high treason, convicted, condemned, and executed for examples. The

An. 1761. Remarkable murder by one Gardelle.

The spirit of murder and affassination still exerted itself in different parts of the kingdom. Women attempted the lives of their husbands; and men embrued their hands in the blood of their own wives. As the last year was distinguished by an atrocious murder committed in London by a foreigner, so the present exhibited an instance of another stranger, who, in the same city, performed a deed of the fame kind, though attended with much more favage and horrible circumstances. One Theodore Gardelle, a Swifs painter, being warmed with fome trivial provocation, layed violent hands on Mrs. King, in whose house he lodged, near Leicester-square, and deprived her of life in her own apartment. The rage of passion which prompted him to this excess was succeeded by a transport of terror, which hurried him into such measures for his own preservation as the humane reader will not understand without shuddering. He concealed what had paffed by locking the apartment where the body lay, and by difmiffing the maid-fervant, who happened to be absent when the murder was committed. He had fent her upon some errand to a different part of the town, as if the murder had been a premeditated scheme: when the returned, he told her Mrs. King was gone fuddenly to the country, and had directed him to difmifs her from her fervice. He accordingly payed what wages were due to this woman, and the retired. Being now in possession of the house, he paffed the night alone in his own apartment. Next morning he descended to the chamber where the body of the unhappy woman lay, separated the head,

a

e

-

n

e

1,

1-ne

h

10

ne

An. 1761. head, and even diffected it with the most gloomy deliberation. This he confumed by fire: the bowels he took out, and buried in the foil of the privy. He then dismembered the body, and destroyed the limbs with a fire made of green wood. that the fmell of flesh might not alarm the neighbours. He divided the trunk in small pieces, and carrying part of them in a fack, threw them into the river. This was a work of time, which he feemed to brood over with a kind of horrid enjoyment. In the intervals of his labour, he folaced himself with the conversation of a prostitute, who lay with him in the house, and from whose side he rose early in the morning, in order to finish his dreadful task. His guilt could not be long concealed. The fudden disappearance of Mrs. King. and the distracted behaviour of the affassin, created fuspicion. He found it necessary to employ an occasional domestic, who perceived signs of blood. The fervant whom he had dismissed exerted herself in his detection: a warrant was granted for apprehending Gardelle; and fearch being made in the house, parcels of the body were found. The murderer, being brought to trial, was convicted on the fullest evidence, and executed in the open street, not far from the place where the crime was committed. He confessed the murder; but denied that it was premeditated. He declared that Mrs. King had first reproached, and then struck him; that in pushing her from him, he was the occasion of her falling backwards; that her head pitching on the fide of a bed, she seemed to have sustained a fracture of the skull; that, terrified by her cries, which which were loud and continued, he, in despair, An. 1761. stabbed her in the neck with an ivory bodkin, which happened to lie on her toilet, and finished . the tragedy by stifling her with the bedcloaths; that the measures he took in the sequel were prompted by the terrors of detection; that the few days intervening between the murder and the difcovery, he passed in a continual perturbation of mind, a kind of hideous dream of horror, from which he waked to penitence and refignation.

In the beginning of the year the attention of Patriotigovernment was sufficiently employed in renewing cal declacommissions for the officers and fervants of the the king. crown, in their different departments; in executing measures for profecuting the war with vigour; in establishing the administration on a solid basis; in conferring posts and dignities on those whom the king was pleased to diftinguish and honour; in communicating to allies the political fystem of the new reign; and in receiving or acknowledging the felicitation of foreign powers on the king's succession to the crown of Great Britain. With respect to the new parliament, his majesty, with the genuine spirit of a patriot king, declared he would in no shape intermeddle with the freedom of election. He rejected, with disdain, the expedient, practifed in former reigns, of employing the public money to fecure what were called the c-n b-ghs. He would not fuffer one farthing to be iffued from the treasury on this account; but is faid to have told a certain m-r. who pleaded the custom of former times, that, as his whole ambition was to render the nation flourishing and happy, he would trust intirely to the loyalty of his people, not doubting that their affection would fufficiently strengthen the hands of his government. Alive and gathill vd yboom and

Appointment of the great officers of ftate.

No revolution of any consequence took place in any branch of religious, civil, or military administration. The metropolitan see of Canterbury was worthily filled by Secker, renowned for his piety, candour, and urbanity. The office of lord high chancellor was conferred upon lord Henley, baron Grange, who had eminently distinguished himself at the bar by his independent spirit, knowledge, and integrity. Lord Mansfield maintained his feat on the King's Bench, and judge Willes in the Common Pleas. The ministry and cabinet council underwent no material alteration, except in the accession of the earl of Bute, who succeeded the earl of Holdernesse as secretary of state for the northern department, and was supposed to stand with Mr. Pitt, the other fecretary, as joint pilot at the helm of administration. The duke of Newcastle still directed the treasury, and, like Fortune's chief minister, dispensed the bleffings of preferment among a vast number of dependants. Earl Granville prefided at the council; and lord Anfon at the board of admiralty. Earl Temple kept the privy feal; and Mr. Legge acted as chancellor of the Exchequer, though in a little time he was difmissed from that employment. Mr. Charles Townshend, being appointed secretary at war, soon proved by his conduct the fallacy of that maxim which holds genius inconsistent with industry; and performed every part of his office with fuch accuracy

DUKE of DEVONSHIRE.

.YYOR

racy and expedition, as had never before appeared An. 1761. in that scene of transaction. The lucrative post of paymaster remained with Mr. Henry Fox, who had fought a furprifing battle with the first demagogues of the age; and who, in shrewdness, policy, and perseverance, yielded to none of his cotemporaries. The management of the king's houshold devolved upon noblemen of unblemished characters. The chamberlain's wand was delivered to the duke of Devonshire, universally beloved for his generofity and fweetness of disposition. The duke of Rutland, so distinguished for his benevolence, was created mafter of the horse; and the office of lord steward was bestowed upon earl Talbot, whose sense and probity added lustre to that unconquerable spirit of patriotism which he posfessed. To the irresistible penetration and invincible courage of this nobleman the Herculean talk was left of reforming the numerous and enormous abuses which had crept into the œconomy of the king's houshold; and this arduous task he performed with unremitting vigour, unmoved by clamour, unfeduced by folicitation: unnecessary offices were extinguished, pluralities dissolved, unconscionable perquisites retrenched, and all forts of fraud abolished. The earl of Halifax was nominated lord lieutenant of Ireland. Divers young noblemen were appointed lords of the king's bedchamber *; and a very few alterations made in places

^{*} The earl of Kildare was created a marquis of the kingdom of Ireland. Lord

Delaware was promoted to the rank of earl of Cantalupe. The honourable John Spencer,

An 1761. places of trust and profit: but, in general, all the members of the great offices, and all the commiffioners of the revenue, throughout the three kingdoms, were retained in their respective employments.

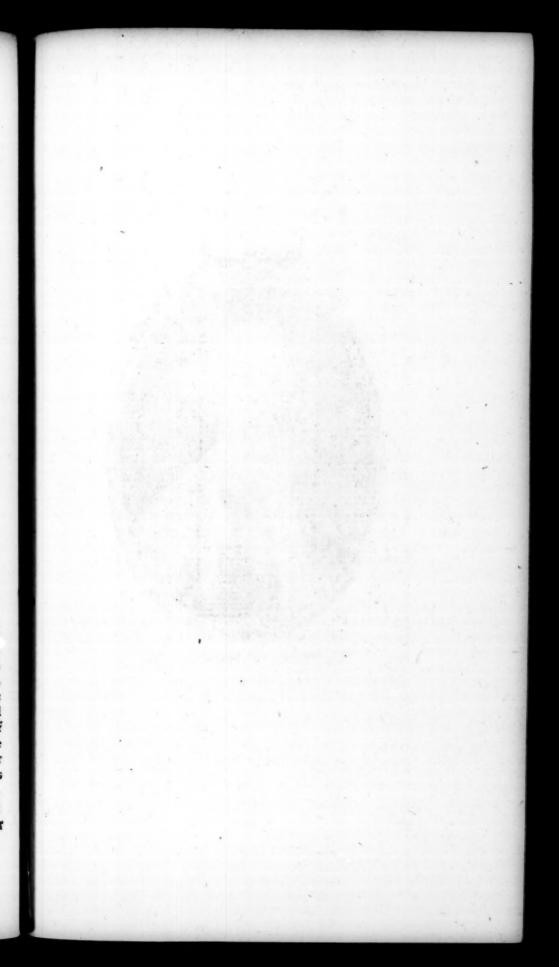

Commanders in the army and navy.

The chief command of the army in Great Britain rested in the person of lord Ligonier. The German army in Westphalia, payed by England, remained under the auspices of prince Ferdinand of Brunswick; the marquis of Granby commanded the British forces on that service; and the direction of the troops in America was still retained by Sir Jeffery Amherst. Neither was any material change produced in the disposition of the different fquadrons which constituted the navy of Great Britain. Admiral Holborne's flag continued flying at Spithead. Sir Edward Hawke and

Spencer, first cousin to the duke of Marlborough, was ennobled by the title of baron Spencer of Althorp in the county of Northampton, and viscount Spencer: George Doddington was made lord Melcomb, baren of Melcomb-Regis in the county of Dorfet. Sir Thomas Robinson was created baron Grantham in Lincolnshire; Sir Richard Grosvenor, baron Grosvenor of Eaton in Cheshire; Sir Nathaniel Curzon, baron Scarfdale in the county of Derby; and Sir William Irby, lord Bofton, baron of Bofton in the county of Lincoln. Mary countess of Bute was vested with the title of baroness Mountstuart, of Wortley in the county of York; the title of baron to devolve to her lawful iffue male by John earl of Bute.

Archibald duke of Argyle dying in April, the title estate devolved on his confin lieut. general John Campbell. The marquis of Tweedale was conflituted justice general of Scotland, in the room of the deceased duke; whose post of keeper of the feel for Scotland was given to Charles duke of Queensberry.

Sr Piercy Brett Kt.

Sir Charles Hardy were stationed in the bay of An. 1761. Ouiberon. Sir Charles Saunders kept the fea in the Mediterranean. The rear-admirals Stevens and Cornish commanded one squadron in the East Indies; rear-admiral Holmes another at Jamaica; Sir James Douglas a third at the Leeward Islands: Lord Colvil a fourth at Halifax in Nova Scotia. These were stationary; but other squadrons were equipped occasionally, under different commanders; besides the single ships that cruised in and about the Channel, and those that were stationed to protect the trade of Great Britain in different parts of the world.

At this period the strength of Great Britain ap- Increase peared in the zenith of its power and splendour. The people of England were feemingly transported beyond the limits of fober reason and reflection. The trophies of war with which their fancies were dazzled, in a succession of favourable events, had accustomed them to idleness, arrogance, and festivity. The fpirit of revelry maddened through the land. Even to the extremities of the kingdom the highways were crouded with the votaries of pleasure, whirled to and fro in gaudy equipages, as if they had been actuated by the demons of desperation. In the metropolis the snares of luxury were extended to the refuse of the people. The lowest traders were hurried into the vortex of diffipation: they grew enamoured of diversion, and vied with their fuperiors in finery and expence. They had their balls, and their mufick-meetings. They affected to rival the first quality of the kingdom in their manners, habit, and domestic parties. They Numb. 35. inof luxury and riot.

intruded themselves into all public assemblies, An. 1761. which degenerated accordingly in point of elegance and decorum. Every place of polite refort became a temple of brutal confusion; and the conductors of theatrical exhibitions thought their entertainments but indifferently received, if every repeated representation did not produce a tumult, and some lives were not endangered by the thronging of the audience. This riotous disposition was inflamed by those scenes of military parade and preparation, which were continually passing before the eyes of the people; the processions of recruiting parties, the evolutions of discipline, new levies of troops, marches and countermarches of intire battalions, and the warlike appearance of the national militia, which was by this time improved into a body of established troops fit for service. All these circumstances ushered in a profusion of idle pageantry, displayed in scenes of barbarous pomp, prescribed by the forms of the constitution, for celebrating the king's coronation. A proclamation was iffued, appointing the twenty fecond day of September for this ceremony; fo that the euriofity of weak minds was foftered, during the whole fummer, to fuch a degree of impatience, that the whole attention of the people seemed to center in this gaudy spectacle: such preparations were made, and fuch eagerness was expressed by persons of all degrees, that one would have imagined the whole nation on the brink of lunacy. It at atoming

> The king, ever attentive to the great purposes of his elevation, and desirous of giving all possible permanency to the present happy establishment, resolved to chuse a consort, whose participation An. 1761. might sweeten the cares of government, and whose virtues should make his private happiness coincide with the fatisfaction of his people. Struck with the character of the princess Charlotta-Sophia, princess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz*, he The privately employed persons, in whom he could king's deconfide, to afcertain the report of her engaging qualifications: being fully convinced of cil, with her personal attractions, her amiable disposition, and fuperior understanding, he made a formal demand of her in marriage. The proposal of marriage. fuch an illustrious alliance could not but be acceptable to the court of Mecklenburg; and the princess herself was not insensible to the extraordinary accomplishments of the young monarch, who had thus diftinguished her by his affection and esteem. In the month of July, the members of the privy council being affembled to a very confiderable number, the king gave them to understand, that, " having nothing so much at heart as claration in counrespect to his intended mounting to about forty thoufand pounds. The duke of Mecklenburg - Strelitz does not receive above twenty thousand pounds a year; but he has a voice in the diet of the empire. The princess Charlotta-Sophia, now in the feventeenth year of her age, is fifter to this prince, born of Elizabeth, daughter of Ernest-Frederick, duke of Saxe-Hildburghausen.

^{*} The dutchy of Mecklenburg lies between Lunenburg and the Baltick, and is neither rich nor extensive. The dukes are faid to be derived from the kings of the Vandals. The people were converted to the christian religion in the twelfth century, and at prefent profess the Lutheran persuasion. The duke of Mecklenburg Swerin, being the eldeft branch, poffesses a yearly revenue a-to procure the welfare and happiness of his people. An. 1761. and to render the same stable and permanent to posterity, he had ever fince his accession to the throne, turned his thoughts towards the choice of a princess for his confort; and now with great fatisfaction acquainted them, that, after the fullest information, and mature deliberation, he had come to a resolution to demand in marriage the princess Charlotte of Mecklenburg-Strelitz; a princess distinguished by every eminent virtue, and amiable endowment; whose illustrious line had constantly shewn the firmest zeal for the protestant religion, and a particular attachment to his family; that he had judged proper to communicate to them these his intentions, in order that they might be fully apprized of a matter to highly important to him and to his kingdoms, and which he perfuaded himfelf would be most acceptable to all his loving subiects."

This declaration was so agreeable to the council, that they unanimously requested it might be made public, for the satisfaction of the nation in general. The earl of Harcourt was appointed ambassador-plenipotentiary to the court of Mecklenburg-Strelitz to demand the princess, and sign the contract of marriage; and the royal yachts were prepared, under convoy of a squadron commanded by lord Anson, to convey the future queen to England. Mean while, her houshold being established, the ambassador set out for the continent on this important affair. The dutchesses of Ancaster and Hamilton were appointed ladies of the bed chamber, to attend her from the court of Mecklenburg in her her passage to England; and embarking at Harwich, the whole fleet fet fail for Stade on the eighth day of August. The contract of marriage being figned by the earl of Harcourt at Strelitz, her royal highness was complimented by the states of the country, and the deputies of the towns. ambassador and the ladies were magnificently entertained; and the event was celebrated with the most splendid rejoicings. On the seventeenth day of the month, the princess, accompanied by the reigning duke her brother, fet out with all her attendants for Mirow, and proceeded to Perleberg, where the count de Gotter complimented her in the name of the Prussian monarch. From thence the continued her journey to Leutzen and Gourde, and on the twenty-fecond arrived at Stade, under a general discharge of cannon, and amidst the acclamations of the people. She was received by all the burgeffes in arms: the whole town was illuminated: triumphant arches were erected; and the public joy appeared in all the variety of expression. Next day she embarked in the yacht at Cuxhaven, where she was faluted by the British squadron assembled for her convoy, the officers and mariners of which were enchanted by the dignity of her deportment, and the affability of her address. In this interval the expectation of the English people arose to a surprising pitch of eagerness and impatience. The king having fignified his intention that the princess should land at Greenwich, both fides of the Thames were for feveral days lined with innumerable multitudes. The river it-

An. 1761:

Contract of marriage between the king of Great Britain and the princess Charlotte of Mecklenburg-Strelitz.

An. 1761. and other veffels filled with spectators, and cruifing between Blackwall and Gravesend, in order to meet and welcome their future queen's arrival. Seats and fcaffolds were prepared along the shore for feveral miles; and all the publicans residing near the banks of the river, both in Kent and Effex, were enriched by an amazing conflux of company. Every individual observed the wind as earneftly as if his whole fortune depended on the first change of weather; and London poured forth her fwarms, like an immense hive, during the first gleams of vernal funshine. All the medicinal wells, to which wealthy people refort in the fummer, either for health or pleasure, were now deferted; and numbers flocked to the metropolis from all parts of the united kingdom to fee their fovereign's bride, and be eye-witnesses of the enfuing coronation. After a tedious voyage of ten days, during which the fleet was exposed to contrary winds and tempeftuous weather, the princess landed on the seventh day of September in the afternoon at Harwich, where she was received by the mayor and aldermen in their formalities. She advanced with her attendants by the way of Colchefter to Witham, and lodged at a house belonging to the earl of Abercorn, where the gratified the curiofity of the people with the most obliging condescension. Mean while the king, whose ardour far furpassed the impatience of his subjects, being apprized by couriers of her arrival, dispatched his own coaches, with a party of the horse-guards, who met her at Rumford, and conducted her to London through innumerable crowds of people, affembled

Her arrival and nuptials.

CHARLOTTE Queen of Great Britain &c.

An. 1761.

affembled on the road to gratify their curiofity, and welcome her arrival. Their applause was fignified in tumultuous acclamations, which attended her for feveral miles; and the eagerness of the populace was carried even to a degree of licentious zeal, which the guards could hardly restrain within the bounds of decent respect. Thus accompanied by great numbers of people in carriages, on horseback, and a-foot, this amiable princess proceeded through Hyde-park, down Constitution-hill, to the garden-gate of the palace of St. James, where she was handed out of her coach by the duke of Devonshire, in quality of lord chamberlain. At the gate she was received by the duke of York, and in the garden she was met by the king himself, whose looks declared the transports of his joy. When she made her obeisance, he raised her by the hand, which he kiffed, and then led her up-ftairs to the palace, where they dined together, with the whole royal family. At nine the nuptial ceremony was performed in the royal chapel, which had been magnificently decorated for the occasion. Besides the royal family, all the great officers of state, the nobility, peers and peereffes, and the foreign ministers, were present at the service, the conclusion of which was announced to the people by the difcharge of the artillery in the Park and at the Tower: and the cities of London and Westminster were illuminated in honour of this auspicious event. Nothing was now feen at court but splendour and festivity, exhibiting ail the marks of mirth and satisfaction. The great accession of domestic happiness that the king enjoyed in this connexion, enabled P 4

An. 1761. abled him to support the fatigue of receiving fresh addresses of felicitation, which were ushered in as usual by the city of London, and poured upon him by the clergy, the universities, the different sects of religionists, the cities, towns, and corporations in all parts of the British dominions.

Ceremony of the coronation.

But the ceremony of the coronation still remained to be undergone, and was undoubtedly a fevere trial of patience to a prince of true tafte and fentiment. A commission had long ago passed the great feal, constituting a court to decide the pretenfions of a great number of people, who laid claim to different offices and privileges in the celebration of this necessary form; many of these so frivolous, and uncouth, as to throw an air of ridicule on the whole transaction. Westminster-hall was prepared for the coronation-banquet, by removing the courts of judicature, boarding the floor, erecting canopies, and building three rows of galleries for the accommodation of spectators. A platform was laid between this Hall and the Abbey-church, where the king is actually crowned. All the houses and streets within fight of the procession were faced and crowded with benches and scaffolding, which extended on both sides within the Abbey from the western entrance almost up to The prospect formed by these occathe choir. fional erections, which were furprifingly calculated for fecurity and convenience, could not fail to awaken the expectation of the spectator for something folemn and fublime: but when all these benches were filled with above two hundred thoufand people, of both fexes, arrayed in gay apparel, they they filled the mind with an aftonishing idea of the An, 1761. wealth and populofity of Great Britain, and intirely eclipsed the procession, notwithstanding the incredible profusion of jewels and finery, and all the other circumstances of pomp by which it was distinguished. The principal objects, however, ftill maintained their importance in the eyes and bosoms of all the spectators, who could not without the most lively emotions of admiration and joy behold fuch attractive accomplishments in the royal pair, whose virtues adorned the crowns they were destined to wear; he, like Titus, the delight of every eye; and she the fairest pattern of sweetness and complacency.

The oftentation of this year was closed with the anniversary pageants that celebrate the election of a new lord-mayor in the city of London. As the kings and queens of Great Britain are always entertained at Guildhall by the magistrate who happens to be chosen in the year of the coronation, extraordinary preparations were made for the reception of their majesties; who, with a great number of the nobility, honoured the banquet, in the midst of the most tumultuous expressions of loyalty and attachment that ever were known on any former occasion.

Having thus particularized the most remarkable A French occurrences of the year, as it revolved in Great frigate Britain, except one material transaction, which will taken on be recorded in its proper place; we shall now re- of Holview the operations of the war by sea and land, land. as they occurred in the different climates of Europe, Afia, Africa, and America.

Even

An. 1761.

Even from the beginning of winter, the fingle ships that cruised in the Channel were conducted with fuch care and dexterity, that they made prize of a great number of French privateers; a circumstance that evinced their own vigilance and the enemy's activity. In the month of January captain Elphinston, commander of the Richmond, mounted with thirty-two guns. fell in with the Felicite, a French frigate, of the fame force, off the coast of Holland; and a fevere engagement began about ten in the morning, near Gravefande, about eight miles from the Hague; to which place the prince of Orange, general Yorke the British envoy, and the count d'Affry the French ambaffador, repaired with a great multitude of people, to behold the progress and iffue of the battle. About noon both ships ran ashore: nevertheless the action was still maintained, until the enemy deferted their quarters: they afterwards abandoned the ship, which was intirely destroyed, after having lost their captain and about one hundred men, who fell in the dispute. The Richmond foon floated, without any damage; and the victory cost but three men killed, and thirteen wounded. The French court loudly exclaimed against this attack as a violation of the Dutch neutrality, and demanded fignal fatisfaction for the infult and damage they had fuftained. Accordingly the States General made fome remonstrances to the court of London, which found means to remove all cause of misunderstanding on this subject. The Felicite was bound for Martinique, with a valuable cargo, in company with another another frigate of the same force, which suffered An. 1761.

shipwreck on the coast of Dunkirk.

In the course of the same month, captain Hood, Engagecommander of the Minerva frigate, cruifing in the ment by chops of the Channel, descried a great ship of two Hood. decks steering to the westward, and found it was the Warwick, an English ship, which had carried fixty cannon, and been taken by the enemy. She was now mounted with thirty-five guns, and commanded by Mr. le Verger de Belair, with a commission from the French king. Her crew amounted to about three hundred men, including a detachment of foldiers; and he was bound to Pondicherry in the East Indies. Captain Hood, notwithstanding her superior size, attacked her without hefitation, and was very warmly received. Several masts in both ships were shot away, and they fell foul of one another, while the fea ran very high; fo that the crews on both fides were greatly encumbered by their broken masts and shattered rigging. At length the waves separated them, and the Warwick fell to leeward. Captain Hood, having cleared ship, bore directly down upon the enemy: then the engagement was renewed, and lasted about an hour; at the expiration of which the captain of the Warwick struck his colours, having loft about fourteen men killed outright, besides thirty-five wounded. The loss in number of men was equal on board the Minerva, and all her masts went by the board: nevertheless the prize was brought in triumph to Spithead. In the progress of the same cruize captain Hood had also taken the Ecurneil privateer from Bayonne captain

An.1761.

Bayonne, of fourteen guns, and one hundred and twenty-two men.

Exploit by capt. Nightingale.

In March another French ship, called the Entreprenant, pierced for forty-four guns, but mount. ed with twenty-fix only, having two hundred men on board, and a rich cargo, bound for St. Domingo, was encountered near the Land's-end by the Vengeance frigate of twenty-fix guns, commanded by captain Nightingale. The action was maintained on both fides with uncommon fury, until the Vengeance being fet on fire by the enemy's wadding, the French resolved to take advantage of the confusion produced by this accident, and, running their bowsprit upon the taffaril of the English frigate, attempted to board her. In this defign however they miscarried, through the courage and activity of captain Nightingale, who found means to difengage himself, and sheered off to repair his rigging, which had greatly suffered in the engagement. The ship was no sooner in proper condition than he ranged up again close to the enemy, and renewed the contest, which lasted a full hour: then the Entreprenant bore away. Captain Nightingale, though a fecond time difabled in his masts and rigging, wore ship, ran within pistol-shot, and began a third vigorous attack, which lasted an hour and a half before the enemy called for quarter. Fifteen of their men were killed, and about twice that number wounded. The victors loft about half as many. The iffue of all these engagements, between fingle ships, proves, to demonstration, that the French mariners neither work their ships nor manage their artillery with with that skill and dexterity which appear in the An. 1761. English navy: a circumstance the more remarkable, as all the French feamen are regularly taught the practical part of gunnery; whereas no fuch pains are taken with the failors of Great Britain.

> Other fhips taken from the enemy.

In April another French frigate, called the Comete, of two and thirty guns, and two hundred and fifty men, just failed from Brest, was taken to the westward of Ushant by the Bedford, an English ship of the line, commanded by captain Deane. who conveyed her in fafety to Plymouth. About the same period, and near the same place, a fourth frigate of the enemy, called the Pheasant, manned with one hundred and twenty-five mariners, was engaged, taken, and brought to Spithead, by captain Brograve, commander of the Albany floop, whose victory was the cheaper, as the crew of the Pheasant had thrown fourteen of their guns overboard during the chace. In the course of the same month a large East-India ship, fitted out from France, with twenty-eight guns, and three hundred and fifty men, fell in with the Hero and the Venus, commanded by the captains Fortescue and Harrison, and, being taken without opposition, were carried into Plymouth.

The cruizers belonging to the fquadron com- Exploits manded by vice-admiral Saunders in the Mediterranean, were diftinguished by the same spirit of Mediterenterprize and activity. In the beginning of this very month the Oriflame, a French ship of forty guns, being off Cape Tres Foreas, was descried by the Isis, under the command of captain Wheeler, in the ranean. An. 1761. who came up with her at fix in the evening, and a running fight was maintained until half an hour after ten. Captain Wheeler being unfortunately killed in the beginning of the action, the command devolved to lieutenant Cunningham, who perceiving at length that the enemy's defign was to reach, if possible, the Spanish shore, boarded her without further hesitation; and in a little time, her commander fubmitting, she was brought into the bay of Gibraltar. The number of her killed and wounded amounted to forty-five, out of a complement of three hundred and feventy: the loss of the Isis did not exceed four killed and nine wounded. In July another exploit was performed by a fmall detachment from the squadron commanded by the same admiral. Captain Proby, in the Thunderer, together with the Modeste, Thetis, and Favourite floop, being ordered to cruize upon the coast of Spain, with a view to intercept the Achilles and Bouffon, two French ships of war, which lay in the harbour of Cadiz: they at length ventured to come forth, and on the fixteenth day of the month were descried by the British cruizers. About midnight the Thunderer came up with the Achilles, which struck, after a warm engagement of half an hour: yet, in this short action, captain Proby had near forty men killed, and above one hundred wounded, he himself having sustained a flight hurt in the right arm. About feven in the same morning the Thetis engaged the Bouffon, and the fire was maintained on both fides with great vivacity for half an hour, when the Modeste ranging up, and firing a few guns, the French captain submitted.

mitted. His ship and her consort suffered considerably, both in their crews and rigging; nevertheless, the victors carried them safely into the bay of Gibraltar.

One of the most remarkable and shining actions that diffinguished this war, and proved beyond all contradiction the superiority which the English claimed over the French in point of naval discipline, was an incident which we shall now relate. On Monday the tenth of August, captain Faulkner of the Bellona, a ship of the line, and captain Logie of the Brilliant, a frigate of thirty guns, failed from the river Tagus for England, having on board a confiderable fum of money for the merchants of London. On Thursday in the afternoon, being then off Vigo, they discovered three sail of ships standing in for the land, one of the line of battle, and two frigates. They no fooner descried captain Faulkner than they bore down upon him, until within the distance of seven miles, when, seeing the Bellona and the frigate through the magnifying medium of a hazy atmosphere, they mistook them both for two-decked ships, and, dreading the iffue of an engagement, resolved to avoid the encounter. For this purpose they suddenly wore round, filled all their fails, and crouded away. Captain Faulkner being by this time convinced of their fize, and conjecturing, from the intelligence

he had received, that the large ship was the Courageux (in which particular he was not mistaken), he hoisted all the canvas he could carry, and gave chace until sun set, when one of the French frigates hauling out in the offing, he displayed a Remarkable engagement by the captains Faulkner and Logie.

fignal

An. 1761. fignal to the Brilliant to pursue in that direction. and his order was immediately obeyed. They kept fight of the enemy during the whole night. and at fun-rife had gained but about two miles upon them in a chace of fourteen hours; fo that the French commodore might have still avoided an engagement for the whole day, and enjoyed the chance of escaping in the darkness of the succeeding night; but he no longer declined the action. The air being perfectly ferene, he now perceived that one of the English ships was a frigate; and the Bellona herself, which was one of the best constituted ships in the English navy, lay so shush in the water as to appear at a distance considerably fmaller than the really was. The French commander, therefore, being a man of spirit, hoisted a red enfign on the mizzen shrouds, as a fignal for his two frigates to close with and engage the Brilliant. At the same time he hauled down his studding fails, wore round, and stood for the Bellona under his topsails; while captain Faulkner advanced towards her with an eafy fail, and ordered his quarters to be manned. The fea was undulated by a gentle breeze, which facilitated the working of the ships, and at the same time permitted the full use of their heavy artillery. The two ships were equal in burthen, in number of guns, and in weight of metal. The crew on board of the Courageux amounted to seven hundred men, able to stand to their quarters; and they were commanded by M. du Guy Lambert, an officer of approved valour and ability. The Bellona's complement confifted of five hundred and fifty chosen men, accustomed to discipline, and inured to fer- An. 1761. vice. All the officers were gentlemen of known merit, and the commander had on many occasions diftinguished himself by his bravery and conduct. The fire on both fides was suspended until they were within musket shot of each other, and then the engagement began with a dreadful discharge of fire-arms and artillery. In less than nine minutes all the Bellona's braces, bowlings, shrowds, and rigging, were cut and fnattered by the fhot, and the mizen-mast fell over the stern, with all the men on the round top, who, nevertheless, faved their lives, by clambering into the portholes of the gun-room. Captain Faulkener, apprehensive that the enemy would seize the opportunity of his being disabled, and endeavour to escape, gave orders for immediate boarding; an attempt which the polition of the two ships foon rendered altogether impracticable. The Courageux was now falling athwart the fore-foot or bows of the Bellora, in which case the English thip must have been raked fore and aft with great The haul-yards, and most of the execution. other ropes by which the Bellona could be worked. were already shot away. Captain Faulkener, however, with the assistance of his master, made use of the studding fails with such dexterity, as to ware the ship quite round, and fall upon the opposite quarter of the Courageux. His presence of mind and activity in this delicate fituation, were not more admirable than the discipline and dispatch of his officers and men, who, perceiving this change in their polition, flew to the guns on the other NUMB. XXXVI. fide.

An. 1761. fide, now opposed to the enemy, from whence they poured in a most terrible discharge, and maintained it without intermission or abatement. Every shot took place, and bore destruction along with it. The fides of the Courageux were shatter. ed and torn by every successive broadside, and her decks were strewed with carnage. About twenty minutes did the enemy fustain the havock made by this battery, fo inceffantly plied, and fo fatally directed. At length it became so intolerable, that the French enfign was hauled down: the rage of battle ceased; the English mariners had left their quarters, and the officers congratulated each other on the fuccess of the day. At this juncture a shot being unexpectedly fired from the lower tier of the Courageux, the British seamen ran to their quarters, and, without orders, poured in two broadfides upon the enemy, who now called for quarter, and an end was put to the engagement. The damage done to the rigging of the Bellona was considerable, but she suffered very little in the hull, and the number of the killed and wounded did not exceed forty. The case was very different with the Courageux, which now appeared like a wreck upon the water. Nothing was feen standing but her foremast and bowfprit; large breaches were made in her sides; her decks were torn up in feveral parts; many of her guns were dismounted; and her quarters were filled with the mangled bodies of the dying and the dead. Above two hundred and twenty were killed outright, and half that number was brought ashore wounded to Lisbon, to which place the prize prize was conveyed. Captain Faulkener was not An. 1761. more commendable for his gallantry in the action, than for the humanity and politeness with which he treated his prisoners, whose grateful acknowledgement, and unfolicited applause, constitute the fairest testimony that a man of honour can enjoy. Nor ought we to with-hold our praise from Capt. Logie of the Brilliant, whose valour and dexterity, in a great measure, contributed to the fuccess of his commodore. Perceiving it would be impossible for him to acquire any thing but laurels from two frigates, the least of which was of equal strength with the ship he commanded; he resolved to amuse them both, so as to hinder either from affifting the Courageux. He accordingly began the action by engaging one of them, called la Malicieuse. The other coming up, he withstood their joint efforts, so as to employ their whole fire, while the great ships were engaged. and even above half an hour after the Courageux had struck her colours. Finally, he obliged them both to sheer off, and to consult their safety in flight, after they had suffered considerably in their masts and rigging. Captain Faulkner returned to Lifbon with his prize, which had well nigh perished by accident, before he reached the Tagus. A cask of spirituous liquor catching fire near one of the magazines, the ship must have blown up, had not she been faved by the presence of mind and resolution of Mr. Male, the first lieutenant. Obferving the flames already communicated to fome combustibles that happened to be in the way, he leaped down the hatch way into the midst of them, Q 2

f

0

r

2

d

).

V-

1-иd

re

ht

ne

An. 1761. fide, now opposed to the enemy, from whence they poured in a most terrible discharge, and maintained it without intermission or abatement. Every shot took place, and bore destruction along with it. The sides of the Courageux were shattered and torn by every fuccessive broadside, and her decks were strewed with carnage. About twenty minutes did the enemy fustain the havock made by this battery, fo incessantly plied, and so fatally directed. At length it became so intolerable, that the French enfign was hauled down: the rage of battle ceased; the English mariners had left their quarters, and the officers congratulated each other on the fuccess of the day. At this juncture a shot being unexpectedly fired from the lower tier of the Courageux, the British seamen ran to their quarters, and, without orders, poured in two broadfides upon the enemy, who now called for quarter, and an end was put to the engagement. The damage done to the rigging of the Bellona was considerable, but she suffered very little in the hull, and the number of the killed and wounded did not exceed forty. The case was very different with the Courageux, which now appeared like a wreck upon the water. Nothing was feen standing but her foremast and bowfprit; large breaches were made in her fides; her decks were torn up in feveral parts; many of her guns were dismounted; and her quarters were filled with the mangled bodies of the dying and Above two hundred and twenty were killed outright, and half that number was brought ashore wounded to Lisbon, to which place the prize was conveyed. Captain Faulkener was not An. 1761. more commendable for his gallantry in the action, than for the humanity and politeness with which he treated his prisoners, whose grateful acknowledgement, and unfolicited applause, constitute the fairest testimony that a man of honour can enjoy. Nor ought we to with-hold our praise from Capt. Logie of the Brilliant, whose valour and dexterity, in a great measure, contributed to the fuccess of his commodore. Perceiving it would be impossible for him to acquire any thing but laurels from two frigates, the least of which was of equal strength with the ship he commanded; he resolved to amuse them both, so as to hinder either from affifting the Courageux. He accordingly began the action by engaging one of them, called la Malicieuse. The other coming up, he withftood their joint efforts, so as to employ their whole fire, while the great ships were engaged. and even above half an hour after the Courageux had struck her colours. Finally, he obliged them both to sheer off, and to consult their safety in flight, after they had suffered considerably in their masts and rigging. Captain Faulkner returned to Lifbon with his prize, which had well nigh perished by accident, before he reached the Tagus. A cask of spirituous liquor catching fire near one of the magazines, the ship must have blown up, had not she been faved by the presence of mind and resolution of Mr. Male, the first lieutenant. Obferving the flames already communicated to some combustibles that happened to be in the way, he leaped down the hatch way into the midst of them, Q 2

prize

An. 1761.

them, and by his personal endeavours they were happily extinguished. The centinel, who had kindled the fire by admitting a candle too near the spirits, was burned to death; and twenty French prisoners hearing the alarm, leaped into the sea, where they perished. The two English captains joined in a liberal subscription with the British sactory at Lisbon, for the relief of the wounded French prisoners, who, without this generous interposition, must have starved, as no provision was made by their own sovereign.

Reduction of Mihie in the East-Indies.

Nothing else of any importance was atchieved against the enemy in this part of the world: but fome advantages were gained in the East and West Indies. After the reduction of Pondicherry on the coast of Coromandel, an armament was equipped against the French settlement of Mihie, situated on the coast of Malabar, about thirty miles to the northward of Tillichery. A body of forces was embarked at Bombay for this expedition, under the command of Major Hector Monro, who took his measures so well, in concert with Mr. Hodges, commander for the English at Tillicherry, and acted with fo much vigour in the execution of the scheme, that in the beginning of February, Mr. Louet, commander in chief of the French garrifon at Mihie, furrendered the place, with all its dependencies. Though this acquisition is of no great consequence to the English, merely as a trading port, the loss of it must be severely sek by the enemy, who had fortified it at a confiderable expence, and mounted the fortifications with above two hundred pieces of cannon.

The French officers in the East-Indies, not- An. 1761. withstanding the loss of Pondicherry, employed Victory the arts of infinuation with fuch fuccefs, as to interest in their cause a prince of the Mogul empire, called Shah Zadda, who took the field at the head of fourscore thousand men, against the forces of the English East-India company, commanded by Major John Carnack, and reinforced by the fuba of Bengal. This whole army confifted of five hundred Europeans, two thousand five hundred fepoys, and twenty thousand black troops, with twelve pieces of cannon. Both fides advanced to the neighbourhood of Guya, and on the fifteenth day of January, the Mogul army was defeated in a pitched battle. All their artillery was taken, together with part of their baggage, and a number of French officers, including Mr. Law, their principal commander. The shah made an effort to join two rajas, who had taken up arms against the suba; but, receiving intelligence that they were already reduced by the English troops, he furrendered at discretion to the suba. who treated him with great respect, and promised. with the affistance of the English company, to support him in his pretensions to the Mogul empire.

a

n

d

e

d

as er

es,

nd

he

Ir.

ri-its

no

; 2

felt er-

rith

The

In the opposite scale to these successes of the English, we must place the atchievements of the Count d'Estaing, who, with a small squadron, had, in the year one thousand seven hundred and fiftynine, made himself master of the English fort of Bender-Abassi, in the gulph of Persia, taken two frigates, with three other vessels belong-obtained by the English over the Mogul forces.

Success of the French in the gulph of Perfia, Sumatra. An. 1761.

them, and by his personal endeavours they were happily extinguished. The centinel, who had kindled the fire by admitting a candle too near the spirits, was burned to death; and twenty French prisoners hearing the alarm, leaped into the sea, where they perished. The two English captains joined in a liberal subscription with the British sactory at Lisbon, for the relief of the wounded French prisoners, who, without this generous interposition, must have starved, as no provision was made by their own sovereign.

Reduction of Mihie in the East-Indies.

Nothing elfe of any importance was atchieved against the enemy in this part of the world: but fome advantages were gained in the East and West Indies. After the reduction of Pondicherry on the coast of Coromandel, an armament was equipped against the French settlement of Mihie, situated on the coast of Malabar, about thirty miles to the northward of Tillichery. A body of forces was embarked at Bombay for this expedition, under the command of Major Hector Monro, who took his measures so well, in concert with Mr. Hodges, commander for the English at Tillicherry, and acted with fo much vigour in the execution of the scheme, that in the beginning of February, Mr. Louet, commander in chief of the French garrifon at Mihie, furrendered the place, with all its dependencies. Though this acquisition is of no great consequence to the English, merely as a trading port, the loss of it must be severely felt by the enemy, who had fortified it at a confiderable expence, and mounted the fortifications with above two hundred pieces of cannon.

The

The French officers in the East-Indies, not- An. 1761. withstanding the loss of Pondicherry, employed Victory the arts of infinuation with fuch fuccess, as to in- obtained terest in their cause a prince of the Mogul empire, called Shah Zadda, who took the field at the over the head of fourscore thousand men, against the forces Mogul of the English East-India company, commanded by Major John Carnack, and reinforced by the fuba of Bengal. This whole army confifted of five hundred Europeans, two thousand five hundred fepoys, and twenty thousand black troops, with twelve pieces of cannon. Both fides advanced to the neighbourhood of Guya, and on the fifteenth day of January, the Mogul army was defeated in a pitched battle. All their artillery was taken, together with part of their baggage, and a number of French officers, including Mr. Law, their principal commander. The shah made an effort to join two rajas, who had taken up arms against the suba; but, receiving intelligence that they were already reduced by the English troops, he furrendered at discretion to the suba, who treated him with great respect, and promised. with the affiftance of the English company, to support him in his pretentions to the Mogul empire.

In the opposite scale to these successes of the English, we must place the atchievements of the Count d'Estaing, who, with a small squadron, had, in the year one thousand seven hundred and fiftynine, made himself master of the English fort of Persia, Bender-Abassi, in the gulph of Persia, taken two frigates, with three other veffels belong-

by the English forces.

Success of the French in the gulph of and at Sumatra.

An. 1761. ing to the company. In the fucceding year the fort of Nattal surrendered to him at discretion, and he found two ships in the road. After these exploits, he failed to Sumatra, where he reduced Bencouli, Tappanopoli, and Marlborough fort; which last, though in a good state of defence, was ingloriously given up by the English, after they had themselves burned a rich company's ship that lay in the harbour. *

A Dutch lettlement deftroved on the island of Ceylon.

In the course of the succeeding month a revolution happened in the island of Ceylon, lying off Cape Comorin, the extremity of the peninfula of The Dutch fettled on this island, having discontinued the payment of certain duties demanded by the king of Candia, and being fufpected of a delign to render that kingdom tributary to their power; the prince marched with a considerable army against their settlements; surprized Point de Galle, and having taken Colombo, their principal establishment, massacred all that were found in it, without distinction of fex or age. Then he ordered his troops to hew down all the cinnamon and other spice trees that grew in the part of the country to which the European traders had access, and threatened to extirpate every Dutch family from the island.

fluence and address of the English president Vansittart, and the government conferred on his fon-in-law Mir Mahmoud Coffum Ali Kawn, who confirmed and augmented the privileges of the English company.

^{*} It may not be amis to inform the reader, that in the latter end of the preceding year, Jaffier Ali Kawn, who had been established nabob or fubah of Bengal, by the arms of the English, was now, for his cruelty and mal-admini-Aration, deposed by the in-

The operations of war on the continent of An. 1761. America, during this campaign, were confined to an expedition against the Cherokee Indians, under tions athe direction of Colonel Grant, a brave and vigilant officer, at the head of two thousand fix hundred men, who, in the beginning of July, began America. his march from Fort Prince George, on the frontiers of Carolina, for the country of the Cherokees, which he refolved to ravage with fire and fword. On the tenth day of the month, he was attacked on his march by a body of Indians, who fired for fome time with great vivacity, but little effect, and then disappeared. After this attempt he met with no opposition in traversing their He reduced fifteen towns to ashes, besides little villages and farm houses; destroyed about fourteen hundred acres of corn, drove the inhabitants to starve in the mountains. and filled their whole nation with difmay. This terror produced the defired effect, and compelled them to fue for peace. A deputation of their chiefs waited on the colonel, to explain their diftreffes, and fignify their fentiments on the fubject, and he forwarded them to the lieutenantgovernor at Charles-Town, where a new treaty was actually concluded. Sir William Johnson made a tour round the other Indian nations, in order to quiet their fears, arroufed at the conquests of Great-Britain; which fears the French emissaries had fomented with their usual industry and fuccess. A conference was held between the Six Nations and fome of the American governors, in order to ratify the treaties subsisting with those tribes : Q 4

Operagainst the Cherokees in tribes; but a warm dispute arose from a demand of certain lands, made by a Delaware chief, who complained that the English settlers had taken posfession of them in consequence of a fraudulent purchase; and though the rising animosity was stifled for the present, it may acquire new force, and be productive of mischievous consequences, unless proper means shall be used for the satisfaction of those savages. The more northern Indians fettled on the frontiers of Nova Scotia. seemed extremely well-pleased with their new protectors and allies. Their chiefs in great numbers visited the governor of Halifax, owned their dependence on the king of Great-Britain, and, in token of perpetual friendship and alliance, buried the hatchet with the usual solemnity.

Prize taken by rear-admiral Holmes.

In the West-Indies, rear-admiral Holmes, commander of the squadron at Jamaica, planned his cruifes with equal judgment and fuccefs. Having received intelligence in the beginning of June. that feveral fhips of war belonging to the enemy had failed from Port Louis, and in particular that the St. Anne had just quitted Portau Prince, he forthwith made fuch a disposition of his squadron as was most likely to intercept them; and on the thirteenth day of the month, he himself in the Hampthire fell in with the St. Anne, and chased her to leeward down upon the Centaur. Her captain discovering this last ship, hauled up between them, and ran close in shore, until he was becalmed, about a league to the northward of Donna Maria bay. Then he began to fire his stern chase; but when the Centaur came along-fide, he struck his colours, and furrendered. The St. Anne was An. 1761. a beautiful new ship, pierced for fixty-four cannon, but mounting only forty, manned with near four hundred mariners and foldiers, under the command of Mr. Aiguillon, and loaded with a rich cargo of coffee, indigo, and fugar. Nor was the fquadron stationed off the Leeward Islands, under the direction of Sir James Douglas, less alert and effectual in protecting the British traders, and scouring those seas of the Martinico privateers, of which he took a great number.

In the month of June, the island of Dominique, Reducwhich the French had fettled and put in a posture of tion of defence, was attacked and reduced by a small the island body of troops commanded by Lord Rollo, and nique. conveyed thither from Guadalupe by Sir James Douglas, with four ships of the line, and some frigates. Two officers being fent on shore at Rofeau, with a manifesto directed to the inhabitants. two deputies came off in order to treat of a furrender; but the first transports of their fear subfiding, and Monsieur Longprie, their governor, encouraging them to fland upon their defence, they afterwards refused to submit, and manned their intrenchments with a face of resolution. The ships immediately anchored close to the shore, and a disposition was made for disembarking. The troop landed in the evening, and formed on the beach side, under the fire of the squadron. Lord Rollo seeing the forces galled by an irregular fire from trees and bushes; considering that the intrenchments commanded the town, which he had already occupied; that the country of Domi-

An. 1761. was naturally strong, and the enemy might be reinforced before morning; moved by these considerations, he resolved to attack their intrenchments without delay; and this service was performed by himself and Colonel Melville at the head of the grenadiers, with such vigour and success, that the enemy were driven successively from all their batteries and intrenchments: Mr. Longprie, their commandant, and some other officers, were taken at their head-quarters. Next day the inhabitants submitted, delivered up their arms, and took the oaths of allegiance to his Britannick majesty. Thus the whole island was conquered at a very small expence, and a defensible post established at Roseau by the British commander.

Very little of consequence happened in the British settlements on the coast of Africa, except the destruction of the town of Goree, which was confumed by fire; and an attempt on James fort, in the mouth of the river Gambia, by two French snows, one of which perished by running on shore, and the other sailed away, after having sustained fome damage.

Tranfaction in the bay of Basque. According to the laudable custom of these latter times, a powerful squadron had been stationed all the winter in the bay of Quiberon, under the command of Sir Edward Hawke and Sir Charles Hardy. In the month of January, they took two small French frigates bound to the coast of Guiney, and a few merchant-ships of little value; and in the month of March the two admirals returned to Spithead: but another squadron was afasterwards sent to occupy the same station. In the month of July, while the English were employed An. 1761. in demolishing the fortifications on the isle of Aix. the great ships that protected this service were attacked by a French armament from the Charente. confifting of fix prames*, a few row-gallies, and a great number of launches crowded with men. They dropped down with the ebb, and placing themselves between the isle d'Enet and fort Fouras, played upon the English ships in Aix road. with twelve mortars, and feventy large cannon: but they met with fuch a warm reception from the British squadron, that in a few hours they retreated to their former station, where the water was too shallow for the English ships to return the attack.

These were part of that armament which had Armaloitered in the preceding year at Spithead, until ment athe season for action was elapsed. It had been a favourite scheme of the minister, to reduce the island of Belleisle on the coast of Brittany, and this was the aim of the expedition. Belleisle lies about four leagues from the point of Quiberon, about half way between Port Louis and the mouth of the Loire. It extends about fix leagues in length, and little more than two in breadth; contains a pretty large town called Palais, fortified with a citadel, besides a good number of villages, and the whole number of inhabitants, exclusive gainst Belleifle.

^{*} A prame is a long, broad vessel of two decks, mounted with fix and twenty large cannon below, and three mortars above. They are rigged like ketches, and draw very little water.

An. 1761. of the garrison, may amount to fix thousand, chiefly maintained by the fishery of pilchards. It was supposed the reduction of this island would be eafily atchieved, and the conquest attended with manifold advantages: that it would alarm the French nation, and oblige them to maintain a numerous body of forces on the opposite continent; confequently make a confiderable diversion in fayour of the British army in the north of Germany: that its central fituation would render it an effectual check upon Port l'Orient, and disable the enemy from equipping any naval armament at Breft; as all the materials for building and fitting out ships in time of war, were brought thither from Port Louis, Nantz, and Rochfort, through the channel between Belleisle and the main land. which conveyance they could not pretend to use, if the English were masters of Belleisle: finally, that as all the French ships homeward bound from the East and West-Indies, as well as from other parts of the world, ran in with the land, so as first to make Belleisle, the English, by keeping a small fquadron between the island and the main, and a good look-out in the offing, would be able to make prize of all those vessels. Such were the reasons urged in favour of this expedition; to which, however, many plaufible objections might have been started. Supposing the French miniftry fo alarmed at this enterprize as to keep twenty thousand men affembled on the opposite shore, this step they could have easily taken, without draughting one man from the war in Germany. The whole forces of France amount to above two hundred and and thirty thousand men: the German war does An. 1761. not require half that number; consequently they could spare three times the number that would be necessary to defend their sea coast from invasion: therefore the reduction of Belleisle could make no fort of diversion in favour of the British army in Germany, commanded by Prince Ferdinand of Brunswick. With respect to the interruption of the French navigation, the same purpose is more effectually answered by maintaining a squadron in the bay of Quiberon, without which the island can be of no use, as it affords not one harbour in which a ship of war could lie at anchor. But the ftrongest argument against this expedition, was derived from the nature of the island, fenced around by inacceffible rocks, except at a few openings, which the enemy had raifed ftrong bulwarks to defend. In the course of the last summer they had been apprized of the destination of the British armament, and taken great pains to intrench and fortify every place where they thought it was possible to make a descent. The citadel of Palais, planned and executed by the celebrated engineer Vauban, was counted one of the strongest. fortifications belonging to France; and the garrifon, amounting to above three thousand choice men, was commanded by the Chevalier de St. Croix, one of the most resolute and active officers of that kingdom. Why this scheme was preferred to other objects of seemingly greater importance, we shall not pretend to explain: far less can we account for its being delayed a whole year at fuch an expence to the nation; as if hostilities had been been purposely suspended, until the enemy should be prepared to oppose them: certain it is, the troops which had been disembarked and quartered around Portsmouth, during the winter, were reassembled in March, and again put on board of the transports, to the amount of ten battalions, under the command of Major-general Hodgson, assisted by Major-general Crausord, with proper engineers, some troops of light horse, and a detachment of artillery.

An. 1761.

Unfuccessful attempt to land.

The fquadron equipped for this enterprize confifted of ten ships of the line, several frigates, two fire-ships, and two bomb-ketches, commanded by Commodore Keppel, brother to the earl of Albemarle, a gallant officer, who had fignalized himfelf on feveral occasions, in the course of this and the last war. The whole armament failed from Spithead on the 20th day of March; and on the feventh of April came to anchor in the great road of Belleisle, where a disposition was made for landing the forces. The commanders having agreed that the descent should be made on the sandy beach near the point of Lomaria, towards the fouth-east end of the island, a feint was made to attack the citadel of Palais, while two large ships convoyed the troops to the landing place, and filenced a battery which the enemy had there erected. This service being performed, the flat-bottomed boats advanced to the shore; and about two hundred and fixty landed, under the command of Major Purcel and Captain Osborne; but the enemy, who had intrenched themselves on the heights, appeared suddenly above them, and poured in fuch a fevere fire.

COMMODORE KEPPEL.

fire, as threw them into confusion, and intimidated An. 1761. the rest of the troops from landing. Capt. Ofborne, at the head of fixty grenadiers, advanced with great intrepidity fo near as to exchange feveral thrusts with the French officer, until having received three shots in the body, he fell dead on the spot. Major Purcel shared the same fate. which was extended to feveral other officers. In a word, this handful of men being overpowered with numbers, were totally routed, and either killed or taken prisoners; so that this attempt was attended with the loss of near five hundred men, including two fea-officers, and about fifty mariners belonging to the ships that endeavoured to cover the landing. This discouraging check was fucceeded by tempestuous weather, which damaged some of the transports. When the wind abated, the Prince of Orange ship of war failed round the island, in order to survey the coalt, and discover, if possible, some other place for difembarkation: but the whole feemed to be fecured by rocks and batteries in fuch a manner, as precluded all access.

Nowithstanding this unfavourable prospect, another scheme was laid, and the execution of it troops are crowned with fuccess. On the twenty-second day disemof the month in the morning, the troops were barked. disposed in the flat-bottomed boats, and rowed to different parts of the island, as if they intended to land in different places: thus the attention of the enemy was diffracted in fuch a manner, that they knew not where to expect the descent, and were obliged to divide their forces at random.

Mean

An. 1761. Mean while brigadier Lambert pitched upon the rocky point of Lomaria, where Captain Paterson, at the head of Beauclerk's grenadiers, and Captain Murray, with a detachment of marines, climbed the precipice with aftonishing intrepidity, and fustained the fire of a strong body of the enemy, until they were supported by the rest of the English troops, who now landed in great numbers. Then the French abandoned their batteries. and retired with precipitation: but this advantage was not gained without bloodshed. About forty men were killed, and a confiderable number wounded, including Colonel Mackenzie and Captain Murray of the marines, who seemed to vie with the marching regiments in valour and activity, and Captain Paterson of Beauclerk's grenadiers, who loft his arm in the dispute. Monfieur de St. Croix perceiving that all the English troops were disembarked, to the number of eight thoufand men, recalled all his detachments to Palais. and prepared for a vigorous defence, his forces, now joined by the militia of the island, amounting to four thousand men fit for service.

Palais in-

On the twenty-third of April, the English troops were formed into columns, and began their march towards the capital of the island. Next day General Hodgson ordered a detachment of light horse to take post at Sauzon; and on the twenty-sisth, a corps of infantry took possession of a village called Bordilla, where they began to throw up an intrenchment; but they were dislodged by a party of the enemy's grenadiers: the whole army, however, entrenched itself in the neighbourhood. The artillery artillery, and implements of fiege for breaking An. 1761. ground, being still on board the fleet, and the tempestuous weather rendering it impracticable to fend them ashore, the French governor seized this opportunity for erecting fix redoubts to defend the avenues of Palais; and these were finished with admirable skill and activity, before general Hodgson had it in his power to commence his operations. All that he could do, in the mean time, was to publish a manifesto, addressed to the inhabitants. declaring, that, if they would put themselves under the protection of the British government, they should be indulged with the free exercise of their religion, and retain all the rights and privileges which they had ever enjoyed. This affurance pro duced a confiderable effect among the natives, a good number of whom immediately closed with the proposal. The next step the general took was to fummon the French commandant, who remained encamped under the walls of the citadel, and declared he would defend the place to the last extremity; and indeed it must be owned, for the honour of this gentleman, that, in the course of the fiege, he performed every thing that could be expected from a gallant officer, confummate in the art of war. About the latter end of April, some mortars being brought up, began to play upon the town, within the walls of which the enemy now retired; and at this juncture Sir William Peere Williams, a captain in Burgoyne's light horse, was shot by a French centinel, in reconnoitring their fituation. He was a gallant young gentleman, of a good family and great hopes; consequently his fate was universally regretted.

Numb. 36.

R

The

An.1761. Successful fally of the besieged.

The beliegers broke ground on the fecond of May; but next night the trenches were attacked by the enemy with fuch vigour, that the piquets on the left were thrown into confusion. Majorgeneral Crawford, who commanded in the trenches, rallied the troops, and endeavoured to animate them by his own example; but on this occasion they did not act with their usual spirit: some hundreds were killed, and the major general with his two aids-du-camp fell into the hands of the enemy, who retreated without having made any attempt upon the right, where the piquets stood their ground, determined to give them a warm recep-The damage they had done was next day repaired: a redoubt was begun near the right of their works; and from this period the operations of the fiege were profecuted with unremitting vigour, notwithstanding a severe fire maintained without interruption, and a fuccession of well-concerted fallies, which were not executed without a considerable effusion of blood.

The French redoubts taken by affault. The ingineers giving it as their opinion that the works could not be properly advanced, until the French redoubts should be taken, the general made the disposition for the attack, which began on the thirteenth at day-break. A terrible fire from four pieces of cannon, and above thirty cohorns, was poured into the redoubt on the right of the enemy's flank: then a detachment of marines, sustained by part of Loudon's regiment, advanced to the parapet, drove the French from the works, and, after a very obstinate dispute with their bayonets fixed, took possession of the place. All the other five were reduced, one after another, by the fame

Au. 1761.

same detachments, reinforced by Colvil's regiment, under the command of colonel Teefdale and major Nesbit; and a considerable slaughter was made of the enemy, who retired into the citadel with fome Such was the ardour of the afprecipitation. failants, that they entered the streets of Palais pellmell with the fugitives, made a good number of prisoners, and took possession of the town, in which they found the French hospital, and some English prisoners, who had been taken in different fallies.

The English being now masters of the whole The citaisland, except the citadel of Palais, bent all their del capiendeavours to the reduction of this fortress, which was very strong both by art and situation, and defended with uncommon courage and perfeverance on the fide of the befiegers. Parallels were finished, barricadoes made, and batteries constructed: and an incessant fire from mortars and artillery was mutually maintained, by night and by day, from the thirteenth of May to the twenty-fifth, when that of the enemy began to abate. In the course of fuch desperate service, a great number of men must have been killed, and many died of distemper. The island was in itself so barren, and Monf. de St. Croix had taken fuch effectual precautions to remove its produce, that the English army had neither fresh provision nor refreshments, except what was brought by fea from England. From thence, indeed, they were tolerably well fupplied with live cattle: they were also reinforced by one regiment from Portsmouth, and another from the island of Jersey. By the end of May a breach was made in the citadel; and notwithstanding the inde-tulates.

An.1761.

indefatigable industry of the garrison and the governor in repairing the damage, the fire of the besiegers increased to such a degree, that great part of their defences was ruined, and the breach practicable by the seventh day of June, when Mons. de St. Croix, being apprehensive of a general assault, demanded a capitulation. He was industed with the most honourable conditions, in consideration of the noble defence he had made. The articles were immediately signed and executed, and Beauclerc's grenadiers took possession of the citadel.

Thus,

· Capitulation for the Citadel of Belleifle, made June 7, 1761.

Preliminary Article.

"The chevalier de St. Croix, brigadier in the king's army, and commandant of the citadel of Belleisle, proposes that the place shall surrender on the 12th of June, in case no succours arrive before that time; and that, in the mean while, no works shall be carried on, on either side, nor any act of hostility, nor any communication between the English besieging, and the French besieged.

Refused.

Article I. The entire garrison shall march through the breach with the honours of war, drums beating, colours slying, lighted matches, and three pieces of cannon, with twelve rounds each. Each soldier shall have fifteen rounds in his cartouch-box. All the officers, ferjeants, foldiers, and inhabitants, are to carry off their baggage; the women to go with their husbands.

Art. I. Granted. In favour of the gallant defence which the citadel has made, under the orders of the chevalier de St. Croix.

Article II. Two covered waggons shall be provided, and the effects which they carry shall be deposited in two covered boats, which are not to be visited.

Art. II. The covered waggons are refused; but care shall be taken to transport all the baggage to the continent by the shortest way.

Article III. Vessels shall be furnished for carrying the

French

Thus, at the expence of an exorbitant fum, and An. 1761. about two thousand choice troops that perished in the French troops by the shortest way into the nearest ports of France, by the first fair wind.

Art. III. Granted.

Article IV. The French troops that are to embark are to be victualled in the fame proportion with the troops of his Britannick majesty; and the same proportion of tonnage is to be allowed to the officers and foldiers which the English troops have.

Art. IV. Granted.

Article V. When the troops shall be embarked, a vessel is to be furnished for the chevalier de St. Croix, brigadier in the king's army, to M. de la Ville the king's lieutenant, to M. de la Garique, colonel of foot, with brevet of commandant in the absence of the chevalier de St. Croix, and to the field officers, including those of the artillery, and engineers; as also for the three pieces of cannon, as well as for the foldiers of the cour royale, to be transported to Nantz, with their wives, fervants, and the baggage which they have in the citadel, which is not to be vifited. They are to be victualled in the fame proportion with the English officers of the same rank.

e

ıt

Art. V. Care shall be taken that all those who are mentioned in this article shall be transported, without loss of time, to Nantz, with their baggage and effects, as well as the three pieces of cannon, granted by the first article.

Article VI. After the expiration of the term mentioned in the first article, a gate of the citadel shall be delivered up to the troops of his Britannick majesty, at which there shall be kept a French guard of equal number, until the king's troops fhall march out to embark. Those guards shall be ordered to permit no English soldier to enter, nor no French foldier to go out.

Art. VI. A gate shall be delivered to the troops of his Britannick majesty, the moment the capitulation is figned; and an equal number of French troops shall occupy the fame gate.

Article VII. A veffel shall be furnished to the commisfaries of war, and to the treafurer, in which they may carry their baggage, with their fecretaries, clerks, and fervants, without being molested or vifited. They shall be conducted, as well as the other troops,

An. 1761. the expedition, the English atchieved the conquest of a barren rock, without produce, harbour, convenience, troops, to the nearest port of France.

Art. VII. Granted.

Article VIII. Meff. de Taille, captain-general of the garde coste, lamp, major, two lieutenants of cannoncers of the garde cofte, and ninety bombardeers, cannoneers, ferjeants and fusileers, gardes costes of Belleisle, paid by the king, shall have it in their choice to remain in the illand, as well as all the other inhabitants, without being molefted, either as to their perfons or goods. And if they have a mind to fell their goods, furniture, boats, nets, and in general any effects which belong to them, within fix months, and to pass over to the continent, they shall not be hindered; but, on the contrary, they shall have proper affistance, and the necessary passports.

Art. VIII. They shall remain in the island under protection of the king of Great Britain, as the other inhabitants, or shall be transported to the continent, if they please, with the garrison.

Article IX. M. Sarignon, clerk of the treasury of the French troops, the armourer, the bourgeois cannoneers, the store-keepers, and all the workmen belonging to the engineers, may remain at Belleisle with their families, or go to the continent with the same privileges as above mentioned.

Art. IX. Granted. To remain in the island, upon the same footing with the other inhabitants, or to be transported with the garrison to the continent, as they shall think proper.

Article X. The Roman catholick religion shall be exercised in the island with the same freedom as under a French government. The churches shall be preserved, and the rectors and other priests continued: and in case of death, they shall be replaced by the bishop of Vannes. They shall be maintained in their sunctions, privileges, immunities, and revenues.

Art. X. All the inhabitants, without distinction, shall enjoy the free exercise of their religion. The other part of this article must necessarily depend on the pleasure of his Britannick maiefty.

Article XI. The officers and foldiers who are in the hospi-venience, or consequence; while the enemy were An. 17612 suffered quietly to strengthen and improve their establish.

hospitals of the town and citadel, shall be treated in the same manner as the garrison; and after their recovery, they shall be furnished with vessels to carry them to France. In the mean while, they shall be supplied with subsistance and remedies till their departure, according to the state which the comptroller and surgeons shall give in.

Art. XI. Granted.

Article XII. After the term mentioned in the preliminary article is expired, orders shall be given, that the commissaries of artillery, engineers, and provisions, shall make an inventory of what shall be found in the king's magazines; out of which bread, and wine, and meat, shall be furnished to subsist the French troops to the moment of their departure.

Art. XII. They shall be furnished with necessary subfistance till their departure, on the same footing with the troops of his Britannick majesty.

Article XIII. Major-general Craufurd, as well as all the English officers and soldiers, who have been made prisoners since the 8th of April, 1761, inclusive, shall be set at liberty after the signing of the capitulation; and shall be disengaged from their parole. The French officers of different ranks, volunteers, serjeants, and soldiers, who have been made prisoners since the 8th of April, shall also be set at liberty.

Art. XIII. The English officers and soldiers, prisoners of war in the citadel, are to be free the moment the capitulation is signed. The French officers and soldiers, who are prisoners of war, shall be exchanged according to the cartel of Sluys.

All the above articles shall be executed faithfully on both sides, and such as may be doubtful shall be fairly interpreted.

Granted.

After the fignature, hoftages shall be sent on both sides, for the security of the articles of the capitulation.

Granted.

All the archives, registers, publick papers, and writings, which have any relation to the government of this island, shall be faithfully given up to his Britannick majesty's commissary: two days shall be R 4 allowed

An. 1761. establishment on the river Mississippi, from whence they might have been driven by part of the forces under Sir Jeffrey Amherst, without sending one additional regiment from Great Britain.

General State of Europe.

In Germany, fortune had not fo far declared in favour of any one belligerant power, as to produce the least alteration in the political system of Europe. Those states that professed a neutrality still kept aloof, and enjoyed the fruits of their forbearance. The Dutch continued to trade, and grumble at the interruption which their navigation received from the English cruifers: nay, the states of Holland and West Friesland resolved, in consequence of the proceedings of the English, that twelve ships of the line should be equipped with all expedition, and employed in cruifing in the Mediterranean for the protection of their commerce. The Danes extended their trade in filence. The Spaniards at last began to feel the benefit of an active traffick. The Portuguese monarch was engroffed by the trial and expulsion of jesuits and conspirators. The court of Vienna seemed more and more determined against a paci-The empress of Russia promised to act fication.

allowed for the evacuation of the citadel; and the transports, necessary for the embarkation, shall be ready to receive the garrison and their effects. A French officer shall be ordered to deliver up all the warlike stores and provifions; and, in general, every thing which belongs to his most Christian majesty to an English commissary appointed for that purpose. And an officer shall be ordered to flew us all the mines and fouterains of the place.

S. Hodgfon. A. Keppel

Le Chevalier de St. Croix".

with

with redoubled vigour in behalf of her allies: An. 1761. the Swedes appeared still irresolute: as for the French monarch, whatever ambition or interest he might have to atchieve conquests, or to retrieve what he had loft in the war, his finances were reduced to fuch a low ebb, that he could no longer pay the fubfidies which he had promifed to the allies of his crown; and therefore professed an earnest defire to terminate the troubles in which great part of Europe was fo deeply involved.

In the month of February his ambaffador at the court of Stockholm delivered a declaration to the Swedish monarch, importing, that the most Christian king, moved by the calamities of war, so widely diffused, and so severely felt in different parts of the world, thought it his indispensible duty to declare, that his humanity in general, and his regard to his own subjects in particular, prompted him to express his desire that his allies would concur with him in restoring the peace of Europe: that, in adjusting the differences between France and England, he would abundantly display his moderation. whenever Great Britain should be inclined to acquiesce in reasonable terms: that common humanity required his allies to concert with him a plan of pacification; and he hoped every member of the alliance would labour to strengthen, if possible, the bands of amity with which they were connected: that, in the mean time, an accumulation of diffress among his unhappy subjects, an additional depopulation of countries, a diforder in the finances of feveral powers, and the greatest doubt whether an advantageous peace could be made in Ger-

Declaration of the French king to the court of Stockholm.

An. 1761. Germany, induced him to declare, that, as the war had confiderably diminished his resources, he was constrained to lessen his subsidies, and even to give notice, that, should the war continue, he could no longer promise an exact compliance with the letter of his engagements.

Proceedings against the Jefuits in France.

France was not only exhaufted by external wars, but likewise embroiled with internal diffensions, The disputes between the clergy and the civil administration of justice, far from being quieted by the royal authority, seemed to derive fresh rancour from fome late complaints exhibited against the Jesuits; a society which at this juncture incurred universal odium, from the intrigues and conspiracy which some of their members had conducted in the kingdom of Portugal. They were extremely unpopular in France, not only on account of the doctrines which they taught and promulgated in their feminaries and writings, but also for their officious interfering in temporal concerns; and particularly for some frauds in commerce, of which they were loudly accused. They had carried on a considerable trade with the island of Martinique; and some of their vessels being taken by the English cruisers, seized this pretence for stopping payment, in order to defraud their creditors: but they were cited before the tribunals of the kingdom, and compelled to do justice to those whom they had intended to injure. The iffue of this profecution was attended with new difgrace to the whole order, and the people in general wished for their expulsion from France. The parliament of Paris took cognizance of their books, some of which they they condemned to the flames, as containing doc- An. 1761. trines subversive of all government and morality. They moreover iffued fome fevere edicts against the fociety; but the king, interpoling in their behalf, published an arret, suspending all proceedings against them for a twelvemonth. This the parliament agreed to register, on condition that it should continue in force no longer than the first of April: at the same time they directed their first president to represent, in the strongest terms, to his majesty the ill consequences of protecting such a pernicious order; the more dangerous from their great number, which in France alone was computed to exceed twenty thousand.

We shall now turn our attention to the opera- Operations of war, as it hath been profecuted in Germa- tions in ny during the last campaign. In the beginning of ny. January, while both armies remained in winterquarters, the head-quarters of prince Ferdinand being at Uslar, and those of the French general in Hesse-Cassel, divers hot skirmishes happened in different parts of Westphalia. Luckner, with four thousand men of the allied army, had in December been driven from Heligenstadt by a more numerous body of French. under the command of the count de Broglio. In the beginning of January the same count, reinforced by Mr. de Stainville, compelled general Mansberg to abandon the town of Duderstadt, where he was posted; but a reinforcement arriving, under Kilmansegge and Luckner, the French were expelled in their turn, and pursued with confiderable loss as far as Witzenhausen.

Prince

An. 1761.
Fritzlar taken by the hereditary prince of Brunfwick.

Prince Ferdinand, having affembled his army in the beginning of February, began his march towards Caffel on the eleventh day of the month, in four columns, by the way of Warbourg, Liebenau, Sielen, and Dringelbourg, the command of the vanguard being affigned to the marquis of Granby, who advanced to Kerchberg and Metze. In the mean time, the hereditary prince having received intelligence that the French garrison of Fritzlar was not prepared for an attack, he marched thither with a few battalions, in hope of carrying the place by a sudden affault with musquetry only: but he met with fuch a warm reception, that he was obliged to wait for the arrival of fome cannon and mortars, which were plied with great vivacity; and the garrison being destitute of artillery, colonel de Narbonne, their commander, capitulated on honourable terms, after having made a very gallant defence. During these transactions, lieutenant general Briedenbach took possession of a large magazine at Rosenthal, and made an unsuccessful attempt upon Marpurg, in which he lost his life; but this place was afterwards abandoned by the French at the approach of the marquis of Granby, who took possession of it without opposition. Gudersberg likewise surrendered to the same nobleman *.

^{*} This month was diftinguished by the death of Clement-Augustus, elector and archbishop of Cologne, bishop of Munster, Paderborn, Ofnabrug, and Hildesheim, and grand master of the Teutonic Order. The bishopric of Osnabrug should now devolve to a prince of the house of Hanover.

General Sporcken, with the united corps of Kilmanfegge and Wangenheim, had advanced by the Success of way of Dargelftadt to Thomas-spruck, upon the general Unstrut. There being joined by a body of Pruffians, he attacked the Saxon forces, cantoned be- Unftrut. tween Mulhausen and Eysenach, with such vigour and fuccefs, that a great number were flain, and five intire battalions made prisoners of war. On the other hand, the enemy attacked the post of Gentzungen near Filtzberg, from whence they were repulfed with fome damage. The defign of prince Ferdinand was to reduce Ziegenhayn and Caffel, before the duke de Broglio should receive his reinforcements; and thefe two places were accordingly invested.

An.1761. Sporcken on the

The allied army was cantoned in two lines, with Caffel bethe right extending to the Lahne, and the left stretched towards Fulda; while prince Ferdinand established his quarters at Schwiensberg. Lord Granby, having left a garrison in Marpurg, moved into the neighbourhood of Lohr. Another body, under general Hardenberg, advanced to Kircham; while the detachment employed at the fiege of Caffel proceeded very flowly in their operations, and fultained some mortifying checks from vigorous fallies that were made by the garrison. length the marechal de Broglio, being reinforced by all the detachments he expected from the Lower Rhine, advanced towards the army of the allies, which at this time was in no condition to give him battle. On the twenty-first day of March the detachment under the hereditary prince was, in its retreat from Heimbach, attacked by a numerous body fieged by the allies.

An. 1761. body of the enemy near the village of Stangerode, in the neighbourhood of Grunberg. Baron Closen, who commanded the French troops on this occafion, charged nine regiments of Hanoverians, Heffians, and Brunswickers, at the head of his dragoons, with fuch impetuolity, just as they were entering a defile, that they were totally routed, with the loss of two thousand men either killed or taken, eighteen pair of colours, and twelve pieces of artillery. Major-general de Rhede fell in the action, and the rest of the detachment retired in tolerable order.

Prince Ferdinand retreats.

After this difafter, the allies continued to retreat as the enemy advanced. They abandoned the fiege of Ziegenhayn, from which they did not retire without confiderable loss. All the places they had lately reduced were now deferted. The fiege of Cassel was raised; the army retired behind the Dymel, and prince Ferdinand established his headquarters at Neuhaus near Paderborn. In confequence of these motions, the French were again in possession of the whole landgravia e of Hesse Cassel, masters of Gottingen and Munden in Hanover, and at liberty to penetrate into the heart of that electorate. The fituation of the allies feemed the more critical, as the prince de Soubise was at the head of a fecond French army, cantoned on the Lower Rhine; and if he had heartily co operated with the marechal de Broglio, there is no doubt but they might have terminated the war before the close of summer. It was, however, the interest of France to protract the war in Germany, until England should be exhausted; and the g- of the allied allied army found his own private account in fa. An. 1761. vouring this scheme, by remaining ever on the The general hospital of the allies was defensive. now established at Bremen.

The progress of the French was retarded by the Progress loss of a large magazine of hay, collected at Wesel of deon the Rhine, which was confumed by fire, not tached without fuspicion that it was wilfully destroyed. The hereditary prince of Brunswick, at the head of a separate body, advanced to Nettelen, in the neighbourhood of Munster, about the middle of May, to observe the motions of the army under Soubife, who ordered three different camps to be formed at Duffeldorff, Burich, and Rees, though part of his forces still remained in cantonment. The war was in the mean time carried on by detached parties. and skirmishes were fought with various success. The army of the duke de Broglio, having paffed the Dymel about the latter end of June, drove general Sporcken from his post on the left of that river, with the loss of eight hundred men taken prisoners, nineteen pieces of cannon, four hundred horses, and two hundred waggons. After this exploit, the French made themselves masters of Warburg, Paderborn, and Dringelbroen, and obliged prince Ferdinand to repass the Lippe on the second day of July. These successes, however, were overballanced by the atchievements of detached parties, which he fent forth from time to time to harrass them in their motions, and intercept their convoys of provision. On the thirteenth day of July. in the morning, general Luckner with his detachment advanced to Salme, where the count de ChaAn.1761.

bot was encamped with a strong body of horse and foot; which he attacked with such impetuosity, that they were obliged to repass the Lippe with precipitation, and lost about two hundred men, and as many horses, in their retreat. Other parties destroyed the French convoys in the neighbourhood of Cassel, and did such considerable damage to the enemy, that they resolved to join the armies, and give battle to prince Ferdinand.

Battle of Kirch-Denckern.

The allies were encamped at Hohenover: the right wing, at the extremity of which the hereditary prince was posted, extended as far as the village of Buderch, and this was guarded by a detachment. The body of the army occupied the heights of Wambeln; and the prince of Anhalt possessed the ground between Illingen and Hohenover. The marquis of Granby maintained his position on the heights of Kirch-Denckern: lieutenant general Wutgenau, moving from the heath of Untrup, marched by his right, in order to approach the village of Kirch-Denckern: the avenues and posts on the little rivers Aast and Sultzbah were guarded by the piquets of the army. On the fifteenth day of July, in the evening, the army of Soubife, having ftruck their tents, advanced on the left of the allies, and dislodged the advanced posts of lord Granby, against whose corps their chief effort was directed. Prince Ferdinand now thought proper to make a new disposition. The marquis was directed to maintain his ground to the last extremity. Wutgenau was ordered to make a motion to the left, to block up the high road from Lipstadt to Ham, and to act in concert with the marquis, whose right was moreover supported by An. 1761. the left of the body commanded by the prince of Anhalt, and this general's own right extended to the Aast, above Kirch Denckern. Lieutenantgeneral Conway replaced the prince of Anhalt, between Illingen and Hohenover. The hereditary prince ordered lieutenant-general Bose to occupy the heights of Wambeln, leaving count Kilmanfegge on the fide of Buderich. The greatest part of the artillery was distributed by count Schaumbourg-Lippe on the front of the left. General Sporcken, who encamped with a feparate body at Hortzfeld, was ordered to detach fix fquadrons, and as many battalions, over the Lippe, to support M. de Wutgenau, and to act with the rest as he should judge most effectual for the advantage of the whole. Lord Granby, being furiously attacked by the enemy, fuftained a prodigious fire of artillery and fmall arms, and with unshaken resolution withstood all their efforts until the arrival of Wutgenau; who, advancing on his left, and charging them in flank, obliged them to retire into the woods with precipitation: then he extended his right to Haus-Vilinghausen, and turned his left towards the high road of Ham, the defence of which place was his chief object. Prince Ferdinand having learned from the prisoners that marechal Broglio had decamped from Erwite at break of day, in order to join Soubife, and give battle to the allies, concluded that the strongest efforts would be made upon his left, and took his precautions accordingly. He ordered general Howard to bring up the brigade of infantry commanded by Numb. 36. lord

An. 1761. lord Frederick Cavendish, and the cavalry of lord Pembroke. Colonel Grevendorff was detached with two battalions to barricade and fortify the village of Kirch-Denckern, and to be there fupported, in case of necessity, by general Howard. Mean while, the enemy kept poffession of some posts opposite to the piquets of the allied army, and the patroles skirmished all night. At three in the morning the whole French army advanced again to the attack on the fide where Wutgenau was posted, and a dreadful fire of cannon and musquetry was maintained on both sides for five hours, during which the enemy was not able to gain one inch of ground. About nine, prince Ferdinand receiving intimation that their defign was to cannonade the camp of lord Granby from an opposite eminence, immediately ordered a body of troops to anticipate this operation by a vigorous charge. This movement proved decisive. The troops advanced with amazing intrepidity, and attacked with fuch vigour as in a little time obliged the enemy to give way, and abandon the field in Their left, which still maintained a confusion. fevere cannonade on that fide where the hereditary prince commanded, no sooner understood the miscarriage on their right than they desisted from the attack, and retreated in order. The left of the enemy was purfued as far as Hiltrup, about a league from the field of battle; but as the nature of the ground did not permit the cavalry to act, they fustained the less damage in their retreats. In this unfuccefsful attack they loft about four thoufand men, killed or taken, with a few colours and pieces pieces of cannon; whereas the loss on the fide of An. 1761. the allies did not exceed twelve hundred. In other respects, the victory would have been attended with little advantage, had the enemy continued to act in concert, and avail themselves of their great superiority in point of number. But their generals were faid to be actuated by motives of personal pique. and to have mutually thwarted the schemes of each other. Broglio, proud, warm, and enterprising, valued himself upon his military talents, and owed his command to the prevailing opinion that he was the best general in France. The prince de Soubife was deemed a better citizen than a foldier t generous, humane, and amiable in his private character, he aspired not to military glory; but suffered himself to be used as an instrument to gratify the refentment of the marchioness de Pompadour. who hated the marechal duke de Broglio.

Certain it is, after the action of Kirch-Denckern, Soubife which the French denominate from the village of retreats Fillinghausen, their two armies were disunited. to the Broglio marched back towards Caffel; and Soubife, retreating to Dortmund, passed the Roer; as if they had laid aside for that campaign all thoughts of acting further on the offensive. But his passage of the Roer was defigned to secure a great number of barges coming down the Rhine, loaden with forage for his army; and, before he took this step, he fent off two large detachments to reinforce Broglio. Having received his forage, he repassed both the Roer and the Lippe, and advanced as far as Dulmen; while Broglio, penetrating further into the electorate of Hanover, took possession of

An. 1761. Kefter, which he fortified, and feemed resolved to undertake the fiege of Hamelen. Prince Ferdinand, being greatly outnumbered, retired to Dumolt, and called in most of his detachments. The French general encamped in his neighbourhood, on the heights of Neim, and many skirmishes enfued; in one of which prince Henry, brother to the hereditary prince of Brunswick, was mortally wounded. About the middle of August an advantage was gained at Dassel by general Luckner, who attacked and routed a body of the enemy. from whom he took a confiderable number of men and horfes.

Wolfembuttle taken by the French.

Marechal Broglio having passed the Weser with his whole army, as if his intention had been to attack the city of Hanover, prince Ferdinand made a forced march, passed the Dymel, and approached This movement obliged the French general to return with the greater part of his army: then prince Ferdinand, retreating to Paderborn, established his head-quarters at Buhne, from whence he extended his forces towards Hamelen. Broglio once more passed the Weser, encamped near Eimbeck, and laid the whole country under contribution. In the mean time, Soubife having eftablished his ovens at Dorsten, and garrisoned the place with one battalion, the hereditary prince found means to attack and reduce the town, to make prisoners of the garrison, to demolish the ovens, and destroy the magazines there provided: an exploit, in consequence of which the prince de Soubife retreated to the other fide of the Lippe; but he foon repassed that river, and advanced again towards towards Caeffelt, from whence his detachments An. 1761. overspread all the northern parts of Westphalia. While prince Ferdinand lay encamped at Willhemsthall in the neighbourhood of Hamelen, and the hereditary prince at the head of a detachment scoured the open country of Hesse-Cassel, the marechal Broglio made reprifals in the Hartz, where he reduced and demolished the strong castle of Schutzfels, and made the garrifon prisoners of war. A detachment, commanded by his brother the count de Broglio, and prince Xavier of Saxony, having made a forced march, took possession of Wolfembuttle, and then invested Brunswick; but before they could reduce this city, the hereditary prince being joined by general Luckner, flew to the relief of his own capital. At his approach they abandoned their enterprize, and evacuated Wolfembuttle with fuch precipitation as to leave some of their cannon behind, and about five hundred men, who were taken.

Towards the end of September, a detachment Embden from the army of Soubife, commanded by the marquis de Conflans, appeared before Embden, which was garrisoned by two companies of English inva- der conlids, who obtained an advantageous capitulation, and embarked for Bremen: then the French troops laid the town under contribution, and evacuated the place; but the boors of the country rifing in arms, and finking the pontoons on which the enemy had passed the river, the French general sent a fecond detachment, which brought off the first, after having dispersed and hanged some of the peafants in terrorem. Another party from the army and Of nabrug' laid untribution. An 1761. of Soubise entered the city of Osnabrug, which the foldiers were permitted to pillage, as the inhabitants could not pay the exorbitant contribution which was deman, ed. A third made an attempt upon Bremen; but the inhabitants joining the garrison, obliged the French to retreat with precipitation; and they were afterwards reinforced by two battalions of the British legion, the better to secure the magazines deposited in that place for the use of the allied army. This period feems to have been altogether critical. Had Soubife reduced Bremen, passed the Weser, and cut off prince Ferdinand's communication with Stade, while Broglio co-operated with vigour in the countries of Hanover and Brunswick, by prosecuting every measure which his fuperiority of numbers enabled him to take; in all probability the allied army would have been reduced to the necessity of demanding a capitulation; but, as we have already observed, it was not the interest of France to terminate the war in this part of Germany.

The allies offer battle to Broglio at Eimbeck.

Broglio lay inactive at Eimbeck, without attempting any thing of consequence; nor was he at all disturbed in his position until the beginning of November, when prince Ferdinand had formed a plan for attacking him suddenly, before he could call in his detachments; or, at least, to intercept and cut off a large body of sisteen battalions posted at Eschershausen, under the command of Mons. de Chabot. With this view he ordered the hereditary prince and general Luckner, reinforced by the garrison of Wolfembuttle, to advance from their respective posts, so as to be in the neighbourhood of Eimbeck at a certain hour on the fifth of No- An. 1761. vember. He directed the marquis of Granby to force the French post at Cappelnhagen on the fourth; to advance next day to Wickensen, and block up a defile in that neighbourhood, on the road from Eschershausen to Eimbeck. He sent general Hardenberg with a detachment to pass the Wefer at Badenwerder, that he might at the appointed time take possession of a defile at Amelunxhorn, on the other road from Eschershausen to Eimbeck. Having taken these precautions, he himself with the main body of the army passed the Wefer on the fourth near Hastenbeck, and advanced towards Eschershausen. M. de Chabot no fooner understood that he had passed the river. than he began early in the morning of the fifth to retreat towards Eimbeck; but, when he approached Wickensen, he found the road possessed by a ftrong body of British grenadiers and Highlanders: for the marquis of Granby had gallantly forced the enemy's post at Cappelnhagen, and blocked up the defile by the hour appointed. Chabot, perceiving himself intercepted, retreated immediately towards Eschershausen, and struck into the other road to Eimbeck, which general Hardenberg had been ordered to occupy: but in his march to Badenwerder fome of his pontoons were overturned, and this accident retarded him fo long, that he did not reach the place appointed until feven in the morning; and by that time Chabot had passed the defile in his way to Eimbeck, where he arrived at noon, without further interruption. Thus the plan miscarried; and this will generally be the fate of every scheme that depends upon a variety of incidents. Prince Ferdinand, notwithstanding the disappointment, advanced to the French camp, which he found too ftrong to be attacked with any prospect of success. Then he resolved to turn their flank, as if he intended to cut off their communication with Gottingen; a motion which he knew would either bring Broglio to an engagement on equal terms, or oblige him to retreat. The last part of the alternative he chose to embrace, and on the ninth retired with his whole army. This was the last transaction of any confequence that happened between the contending armies in Westphalia. Broglio quartered his army in Cassel, and that neighbourhood. The forces of Soubife were distributed at Dusseldorp, and along the Lower Rhine. The allies established their quarters at Hildersham, Munster, Hamelen, and The British cavalry wintered in East Friesland, and the infantry in the bishopric of Ofnabrug.

An. 1761.

Inactivity of the Austrian and Pruffian armies in Saxony and Silefia. The Austrian and Prussian armies remained quietly in their winter-quarters in Saxony and Silesia, until the spring was far advanced. Whether they found it difficult to provide forage, or thought it more for their interest to remain on the defensive, and observe each other's motions, than to hazard any movement of consequence, we cannot pretend to determine. Certain it is, the generals on both sides were, by a long course of mutual hostilities, become perfectly well acquainted with the genius, manner, and resources of each other; while the forces that constituted both armies had attained to the same strength of body, and the same per- An. 1761. fection of discipline; so that little or no advantage remained on either fide in point of conduct, courage, and military institution. The king of Phad derived caution and circumspection from a repetition of miscarriages and disappointments. He knew too well the vigilance, activity, and fortitude of the Austrian general Laudohn, to hope he should acquire any material advantage from a fudden impetuofity of attack. The number of his forces was confiderably diminished by the diseases of the camp, as well as by a succession of indecisive battles. His dominions were already half depopulated by the draughts he had made to recruit his armies; whereas the countries possessed by his enemies were much more capable to supply such continual drains. The stake which he hazarded was therefore the more important; and he plainly perceived, that even a repetition of victory would complete his ruin. Besides, Laudohn had taken his measures so artfully, that he could not be attacked with any prospect of advantage; and the Pruffian monarch could not shift the scene into another country, without abandoning his magazines and cities of refuge in Silesia. Such indeed was his fituation, that he could not move, without exposing himself to loss or discomsture. He therefore determined to maintain his ground, and act upon the defensive; and instructions to the same purpose were communicated to his brother prince Henry, whose army was cantoned in Saxony, in the neighbourhood of that commanded by count Daun, the Austrian general.

While

Exploits Pof parti- fuzans.

While the main armies were thus disposed, their partizans exerted themselves, as usual, in bold and fudden incursions. In the beginning of April the Pruffian majors-general Schenkendorff and Sybourg, advancing with a body of troops from Gera towards Neustadt on the Orla, continued their march to Saalfield, where they attacked an Austrian detachment commanded by general Kleist, who was routed with confiderable lofs. They likewife drove a body of the army of the Empire from the village of Schwartz, which they had occupied with two battalions, as a post of importance. In this expedition the Prussians took several pieces of cannon, colours, waggons loaded with baggage and ammunition, and above eleven hundred men, including two and thirty officers. After this exploit, the Prussian generals sent a detachment to attack the corps under general Guasco near Plaune in Voightland, who was obliged to retire with lofs. and abandon four pieces of cannon, with all his baggage. Other petty advantages of the fame kind were obtained in the beginning of fummer by the Prussian detachments; but the king in person undertook nothing of consequence in the field.

Alliance between the OttomanPorte and the k—— of

Surrounded by enemies on every hand, and all other resources beginning to fail, he is said to have turned his eyes towards Constantinople, and contracted an alliance with the Ottoman Porte. That he made some efforts of this kind is not to be doubted; and certainly he could not have pursued a more effectual measure, than that of prevailing upon the Turk to make a diversion in his favour by sending an army into Hungary, and ordering a body of troops to advance into the Ukraine. But, An. 1761. probably, the Porte was too pacifically inclined to take fuch vigorous steps in behalf of fuch a remote and inconfiderable ally.

body

> invested by the Ruffians.

In Pomerania the Swedes were not in motion till Colberg the month of August, when prince Henry, having received intelligence that they had begun to advance towards the Prussian territories, detached general Stutterheim to reinforce colonel Belling in that country with a few battalions, at whose approach the enemy retreated. It was in the beginning of the same month, that the army of the empire advancing in Saxony as if they intended to attack Leipsic, prince Henry sent general Seydlitz with a detachment of feven thousand men, who fell upon them with fuch impetuofity, that they were obliged to give way, and retreated with great precipitation to a confiderable distance from the Prusfian cantonments, which they never afterwards prefumed to approach. The Ruffian ministry, having been long fensible of the inconveniences to which their operations were subject from their great distance from the scene of action, resolved, if possible, to reduce Colberg, which would ferve as a magazine and a key to Pomerania. For this purpose, general Romanzoff was detached, in the month of July, with a confiderable body of forces to invest that fortress by land, while it should be blocked up by fea by a strong squadron, in which an additional number of troops with the artillery and warlike stores were transported. This was joined by the Swedish fleet in August, and Romanzoff began to canonade the place; but, as he did did not open the trenches in a regular manner; as the town was strongly fortified and defended by a numerous garrison under the command of an excellent officer; as the Russians were little accustomed to sieges, and the season was pretty far advanced; the Prussian monarch hoped it would hold out until the frost should set in, and render the approaches of the enemy impracticable. The Swedes, at the same time, seemed to savour the operations of their allies. Their army in western Pomerania, having received a reinforcement, began to advance again to the Prussian territories, and skirmished with Stutterheim but no action of consequence was hazarded on either side.

An. 1761.

Ruffian detachments penetrate into Silefia.

The main Russian army, commanded by Butturlin, could not take the field till the feason was far advanced. In May, however, a detachment advanced towards Silefia without artillery, and formed a camp at Bojanovo: another body established a considerable magazine at Posen; a third, under count Tottleben, penetrated into Pomerania in the beginning of June, and made a furious attack upon Belgarde, from whence he was repulsed with confiderable lofs. After this miscarriage, he sent out detachments as far as the frontiers of the New Marche, where they took possession of Landsberg upon the Wartha. In the month of August, while the head quarters of the Prussian monarch were at Strehlen, the Russian general Czernichesf advanced, with the van-guard of that army, to Wohlau; and the Coffacks, with other light troops, passing the Oder, ravaged the country in the neighbourhood of Jauer. Another detachment, more confiderable, penetrated into Silesia as far as Breslau, and began An. 1761. to canonade that capital: but lieutenant-general Tausein, who commanded the garrison, being reinforced by a body of troops under major-general Knoblock, marched out of the place, and attacked the enemy with fuch resolution, that they abandoned their batteries and decamped, after having fustained fome damages.

pene-

At length general Butturlin advanced with the Butturlin grand army of the Russians; and, notwithstanding retreats all the vigilance and activity of the Prussian king, whose motions and measures for some time prevented their junction with the Austrian army under Laudohn, this was effected; and now his affairs feemed altogether desperate. Yet, far from being abandoned by his courage and recollection, he had recourse to expedients, which seem to have frustrated the deligns of his enemies. He detached a confiderable body of forces into Poland under the command of general Platen, whose motions were conducted with such secreey and expedition, that he had burned three Russian magazines in that kingdom, before the object of his march was known; and the great magazine at Posen narrowly escaped the same fate. Immediately after this atchievement, general Butturlin separated the main body of his army from the Austrians, and retreated towards Poland; yet he left general Czernicheff with a confiderable body of forces to co-operate with Laudohn, who, about this juncture, diftinguished himself by an extraordinary exploit, which proved very detrimental to the Prussian monarch's affairs.

towards Poland.

Scheweid-

An. 1761. Scheweidnitz furprifed by the Auftrians,

Scheweidnitz, which had changed mafters more than once in the course of this war, he considered as the most valuable place he now possessed in Sihelia. It was central in its fituation; ftrongly fortified, and contained a great magazine of military stores and artillery. Laudohn formed a scheme for reducing it by furprize, and it succeeded beyond expectation. On the first day of October, at three in the morning, the troops selected for this fervice advanced to the attack in four different places, and, under the favour of a thick fog, not only approached, but even fixed their scaling lad. ders, before they were perceived by the garrison. who scarce had time to fire a few cannon at the affailants. The contest, however, was maintained for some time with small arms, until a powder-magazine in one of the outworks blew up, and about fix hundred men on both sides were destroyed by the explosion. The Austrians, taking advantage of the confusion occasioned by this accident, advanced to the body of the place, and burfting open the gates, entered the town without much opposition. At day-break they found themselves masters of the place; and the governor, lieutenant-general Zastrow, with all his garrison, amounting to three thousand men, were made prisoners. Thus Laudohn, at the expence of about fix hundred men, who fell in the attack, took above five times that number; and made himself master of a strong important fortress, in which he found a vast magazine of meal, and a numerous train of artillery. king of Prussia could not but severely feel this stroke, which was equal to a defeat in the open -Sigwa field:

field: but he bore his loss with fortitude, content- An. 1761. ing himself with declaring he would suspend his opinion of Zastrow's conduct, until he should be better informed of the particulars. In the mean time, this event obliged him to change his position, and approach nearer to Breslau.

In the beginning of December he there cantoned his army, and the Austrian forces were quartered in the neighbourhood of Scheweidnitz. Immediately before the king repaired to Breslau, he had the good fortune to detect a conspiracy, which was formed against his person by the baron de Warkotch, a man of considerable rank and fortune in Silesia, and one Francis Schmedt, a priest. Their intention was to feize the king when he should come forth unattended, and convey him to the Austrian camp: but whether they were countenanced in this scheme by the court of Vienna, is a question which hath not yet been determined. The discovery was made by one of the baron's domestics, who, being charged with a letter from the baron to the ecclefiaftic, and fuspecting the contents, delivered it to the Prussian monarch. Thus the mystery was unravelled: a detachment was immediately fent to apprehend the baron, and feize all his papers. Both were accordingly fecured; but he afterwards found means to escape through a His lady was, however, detained in cuftody. Schmedt having likewife confulted his fafety by flight, the king caused them to be cited to appear by the twenty-first day of January, to anfwer to the charge brought against them, on pain of forfeiting their lives and estates. This expedient Confpiracy against the perfon of the Pruffian monarch.

An. 1761.

dient of kidnapping, howfoever inexcufable in a fubject towards his fovereign, hath been often attempted, and fometimes fucceeded, among princes at open enmity with each other; and, indeed, if it were practifed only against those turbulent powers, whose rapacity no treaties can restrain, and whose ambition hath embroiled all their neighbours, we think it would be a much more laudable hostility than that of bombarding neutral towns, which the enemy has poffeffed by violence, or burning magazines by stealth. The captivity of an incendiary prince will generally stop the effusion of blood, and put an end to the horror and desolation of war; but the destruction of towns and magazines involves the innocent in calamity, and extends the miseries of the human species: for the magazines, thus destroyed, are commonly repaired at the expence of the unhappy country into which the feat of war has been transferred.

Count
Daun makes an attempt upon the army of prince
Henry.

In the month of November the marechal count Daun, having received a large reinforcement from the army of Laudohn, formed a plan for attacking the strong camp of prince Henry of Prussia in the neighbourhood of Meissen. An attempt was accordingly made, and some of the Prussian advanced posts were carried; but the prince was found so advantageously situated, that the Austrian general thought proper to desist, and return to his camp. He then cantoned his forces in the neighbourhood of Dresden, while the Imperial army was put into quarters at Naumburg and Zwickaw. These motions induced prince Henry to distribute his troops also in quarters of cantonment, extending

on'

The great Russian army retreated beyond the

on the right, to Meissen, and on the left, to Katzenhausen.

t

An. 1761.

Vistula; but the corps under Romanzoff still continued before Colberg, notwithstanding all the efforts of the prince of Wurtemberg, whom the king of Piussia had sent to command his forces in Pomerania. The blockade had for fome time been converted to a regular fiege; and colonel Haden. who commanded the garrison, made a very obstinate defence. In the beginning of October, the boifterous weather obliged the Swedish squadron to retire. A Ruffian ship of the line was wrecked, and all the crew perished: their hospital ship was accidentally fet on fire and destroyed: in a word, the Colberg invested by the Ruffians.

Russian fleet likewise withdrew, and returned to Cronstadt; and then the garrison of Colberg received a large supply of provision from Stetin. These circumstances concurring with the severity of the feason, it was imagined, would compel even the Russians to quit the field, and at any rate render the operations of the fiege impracticable; but Romanzoff feemed to fet the winter at defiance, and profecuted his works with unabating vigour, until he reduced a small fort that commanded the harbour. By means of this acquisition he excluded the garrison of Colberg from all communication by sea; so that they were in danger of perishing by famine, when colonel Haden furrendered, on the feventeenth day of December. By this important conquest, it will be in the power of the Russian ministry to supply and reinforce their armies in Germany by fea. In the mean time, the possession of Colberg Numb. 37.

Colberg fecures to them all the eaftern part of Pomerania, where accordingly Romanzoff's forces are distributed for the winter; his own head-quarters being established at Stargart, about twenty miles from Stetin. Thus, the Russians have at length obtained an advantageous pass, through which they may deluge the northern parts of Germany, and make an effectual settlement in the empire, which has been the conftant aim of the court of Petersburg, since, and even before the foundation of that city by Peter Alexiowitz. In that case a certain p-will be the first to rue his own conduct, in kindling the flames of war in the bowels of his country; and the house of Austria will have cause to wish it had relied on its own internal strength, rather than have recourse to the affistance of fuch dangerous auxiliaries. We shall conclude the foreign transactions of cautious regard with which the powers of Europe avoid every opportunity of giving umbrage to the Ottoman Porte. In the course of the preceding year, a large Turkish ship of the line, called the Ottoman Crowne, was seized by the Christian slaves on board, who rose upon the Turks, and, having deseated them, brought the ship into Malta; where, according to custom, the prize was divided among the captors. The Porte demanded the restitution of the ship in the most insolent terms; and the knights of Malta, who are at perpetual war with the insidels, treated this demand with disdain. The grand signior, incensed at the refusal, sent a public manifesto to Naples by this year, with an incident that demonstrates the Incident relating to Malta.

the

b

tı

the capuchins of Tunis, in which he bitterly com- An. 1765 plained of the Maltese knights, and threatened their total extirpation; at the same time he began to equip a formidable fleet of ships and galleys: but as he caused large quantities of warlike stores to be conveyed by the Black Sea to the mouth of the Danube, and the report prevailed that he had lately concluded a treaty of alliance with the Prusfian monarch, certain powers suspected that he harboured some other defign, under the pretext of an armament against Malta. The empress queen of Hungary, to avoid all occasion of giving umbrage to the Porte, forbade all the knights of Malta residing in her dominions, to repair to the defence of that island, in case it should be attacked: a circumstance that plainly evinces what regard even the most bigotted powers pay to the institutions of religion, when they interfere with temporal interests. The French king acted, on this occasion, with more delicacy and discretion. purchased the Turkish ship which had been taken, and fent it to Constantinople as a present to the fultan. It was protected in the voyage by the British cruisers; and the grand signior was pleased to fignify that his resentment was appealed.

t

f

e

n

ê

t

The most important transaction that distinguished this year, was a negociation for peace between Great Britain and France, which was brought upon the carpet at the request of the court of Versailles. We have already observed, that the powers at war had agreed to open a general congress at Augsburg; and the British plenipotentiaries were ac- Versailles tually nominated at the court of London; when

Account of a negociation for peace between thecourts of London and Colberg secures to them all the eastern part of Pomerania, where accordingly Romanzoff's forces are diffributed for the winter; his own head-quarters being established at Stargart, about twenty miles from Stetin. Thus, the Russians have at length obtained an advantageous pass, through which they may deluge the northern parts of Germany, and make an effectual settlement in the empire, which has been the conftant aim of the court of Petersburg, since, and even before the foundation of that city by Peter Alexiowitz. In that case a certain p- will be the first to rue his own conduct, in kindling the flames of war in the bowels of his country; and the house of Austria will have cause to wish it had relied on its own internal strength, rather than have recourse to the assistance of fuch dangerous auxiliaries.

Incident relating to Malta.

We shall conclude the foreign transactions of this year, with an incident that demonstrates the cautious regard with which the powers of Europe avoid every opportunity of giving umbrage to the Ottoman Porte. In the course of the preceding year, a large Turkish ship of the line, called the Ottoman Crowne, was feized by the Christian flaves on board, who rose upon the Turks, and, having defeated them, brought the ship into Malta; where, according to custom, the prize was divided among the captors. The Porte demanded the restitution of the ship in the most infolent terms; and the knights of Malta, who are at perpetual war with the infidels, treated this demand with difdain. The grand fignior, incenfed at the refusal, sent a public manifesto to Naples by the capuchins of Tunis, in which he bitterly com- An. 1761 plained of the Maltese knights, and threatened their total extirpation; at the same time he began to equip a formidable fleet of ships and galleys: but as he caused large quantities of warlike stores to be conveyed by the Black Sea to the mouth of the Danube, and the report prevailed that he had lately concluded a treaty of alliance with the Prusfian monarch, certain powers suspected that he harboured fome other defign, under the pretext of an armament against Malta. The empress queen of Hungary, to avoid all occasion of giving umbrage to the Porte, forbade all the knights of Malta residing in her dominions, to repair to the defence of that island, in case it should be attacked: a circumstance that plainly evinces what regard even the most bigotted powers pay to the institutions of religion, when they interfere with temporal interests. The French king acted, on this occasion, with more delicacy and discretion. purchased the Turkish ship which had been taken, and fent it to Constantinople as a present to the fultan. It was protected in the voyage by the British cruifers; and the grand signior was pleased to fignify that his refentment was appealed.

The most important transaction that distinguished Account this year, was a negociation for peace between Great Britain and France, which was brought upon the carpet at the request of the court of Versailles. We have already observed, that the powers at war had agreed to open a general congress at Augsburg; and the British plenipotentiaries were actually nominated at the court of London; when of a negociation for peace between thecourts of London and Verfailles

An. 1761. the French king made advances towards a separate pacification with England, under the mediation of the Spanish monarch. The count d'Affry, ambasfador from France at the Hague, had feveral conferences on this subject with general York, the British minister; but these proving abortive, and the iffue of the congress being distant and uncertain, the court of Versailles took an extraordinary step to effectuate an immediate peace with England. A memorial of his most Christian majesty was, in the month of March, transmitted by the hands of prince Gallitzin, the Russian ambassador at London, to Mr. secretary Pitt, with a letter from the Duc de Choiseul the French minister, signifying that the king of France hoped the frank and ingenuous manner in which he proposed to treat with his Britannic majefty, would banish all sufpicion and mistrust from the negociation, and engage the king of England to disclose his real sentiments, either with regard to the continuation of the war, or the re-establishment of peace. Helikewise declared, that, with respect to the king of Prussia, his master's allies were determined to act at the future congress, according to the dictates of justice and good faith, fincerely disposed to promote the interests of humanity, and restore the peace of Europe. The French king, in his memorial, expressed his defire that the particular accommodation between France and England should be united with the general pacification of Europe; but, as the objects of the war between France and England were totally foreign to the disputes in Germany, he thought it would be necessary to agree with his BriBritannic majesty upon certain principal points which An. 1761 should form the basis of their particular negociation. In order to avoid the delays which a minute and tedious discussion of particular circumstances might occasion, he proposed that the two crowns should remain in possession of what they should have conquered from each other in different parts of the world, at the following periods of time; in the East-Indies, on the first day of September in the present year; in the West-Indies and Africa, on the first of July; and in Europe, on the first of May: but, as these terms might be thought either too near or too remote; and the king of England might be of opinion that compensations should be made in whole, or in part, for the reciprocal conquests of the two crowns; he would willingly commence a negociation on these subjects; his chief aim being to evince his hearty defire of removing all obstacles which might obstruct the falutary object of peace. These advances met with a favourable reception at the court of London. Mr. fecretary Pitt wrote an immediate answer to the Duc de Choifeul, expressing his matter's fincere desire to correspond with the pacific fentiments of his most Christian majesty. At the same time he declared, that the king of England was determined to fupport the interest of the Prussian monarch and his other allies, with the cordiality and efficacy of a fincere and faithful ally. This letter was accompanied with a memorial, in which his Britannic majesty acknowledged that the objects which occasioned the war between England and France, were totally foreign from the disputes in Germany. T 3 is re

-

(e

d

ee.

is en

th

he nd

ıy,

his

ri-

An. 1761. He agreed that the two crowns should remain in possession of the conquests they had made upon each other; but he objected to the dates prescribed, without proposing any other. Nevertheless, he declared he should be glad to see in London, a perfon duly authorized by his most Christian majesty, to enter with the British ministers into a final discussion of these points, so essential to the interests of the two nations. Accordingly, in the course of the correspondence between the two secretaries, it was agreed that the fieur de Buffy, who had formerly resided in a public character at London, should be appointed minister, and repair to that court in order to manage the negociation; while Mr. Stanley should act at Versailles in the same capacity. In the mean time feveral letters and memorials were interchanged between the two courts. It was in the month of May that Mr. Stanley croffed the fea from Dover to Calais, and at the same time M. de Buffy arrived at London. His instructions were to adhere to the uti possidetis, as the basis of the negociation; to demand an explanation of his Britannic majefty's fentiments touching the dates or æras at which that proposal should take place; to declare to the court of London, that, as the war between France and England was entirely detached from that which had broke out between the empress queen of Hungary and the king of Prussia, his most Christian majesty, excepting Wesel and Gueldres which belonged to the Queen, was at liberty to withdraw his troops from the city of Gottingen, the landgraviate of Hesse, and the county of Hanau; and this evacuation should be made on these these conditions: The court of England should An. 1761. give fecurity that the army commanded by prince Ferdinand of Brunswic should be disbanded, and no longer serve against the allies of France; and his Britannic majesty should agree to such restitutions on his part, as might be judged equivalent to this proposed evacuation. In the conferences which enfued at London and Versailles, the French ministers continued to press a specification of the æras at which the two nations should be entitled to the uti possidetis; and the discussion of this point the English negociators avoided, until the citadel of Belleisle was reduced. Then the English ministry declared by a memorial, in explicit terms, that the first of July, September, and November next enfuing, should be the established æras, after which all the conquests that might be made on either side, should be mutually restored: but, to these æras. the king of England agreed only on the following conditions: That every thing fettled between the two crowns, in relation to their particular disputes, should be finally conclusive and obligatory, independant of the negociations of Augsburg, for adjusting and terminating the contests of Germany; and that the definitive treaty of peace between Great Britain and France, or at least the preliminaries, should be concluded, figned, and ratified by the first of August. With respect to the ulterior compensations to be made, he defired to know the fentiments of the French king on that subject, promiling then to declare himself with the utmost freedom and fincerity. The ministry of Versailles undertook to deliver a memorial of propolitions in form.

An. 1761

form, to the court of London. In the mean time they gave Mr. Stanley to understand, that France would guarantee to England the possession of Canada, provided England would reftore the island of Cape Breton, and confirm the right of French subjects to take and cure fish in the Gulph of Sr. Laurence, as well as on the banks, 'and in the island of Newfoundland: that the fortifications of Louisbourg should be demolished, and the harbour laid open: that Minorca should be restored to Great Britain, in exchange for the islands of Guadalupe and Mariegalante: that, with respect to the East-India affairs, the treaty concluded in the year one thousand seven hundred and fifty-five, between the fieur Godcheu and governor Saunders, should be confirmed; that in Africa, either Senegal or Goree should be restored to France; on which consideration the French king should evacuate Gottingen, Hesse-Cassel, and the county of Hanau; withdraw his troops to the Rhine and the Maine, and leave no forces in Germany, but a number equal to that of the enemy which should remain in the British army affembled in Westphalia. These articles were by no means agreeable to the English ministry, who, by the canal of Mr. Stanley, fignified that his Britannic majesty would not restore the island of Cape Breton upon any condition whatfoever; and that France, in confideration of being allowed to fish on the banks of Newfoundland, should confent to the demolition of Dunkirk. At the same time the propofal relating to Senegal and Goree was rejected. France complained that this demand concerning Dunkirk, was altogether foreign to the negonegociation, which was founded on the uti possidetis; An. 1761. and looked like a delign to take advantage of her eagerness after peace: but she was in no condition to ftand upon punctilio, and she considered the fortifications of Dunkirk, as indeed they were, a matter of too little consequence to frustrate the end of the negociation. In her memorial, dated on the fifteenth of July, she offered to cede and guarantee to England, all Canada without restriction, on these conditions: That the inhabitants of that country should enjoy liberty of conscience, and publicly profess their religion according to the rites of the catholic church: that fuch as are inclined to quit that country, might retire to the French colonies with all manner of freedom and fafety; that they should be allowed to fell their estates, and transport their effects, without lett or molestation; and the English government should supply them with the means of conveyance at the most reasonable expence: that the limits of Canada and Louisiana should be ascertained in such manner, as to preclude all possibility of disputes on this subject, after peace should be re-established: that France should, as formerly, enjoy a share of the cod-fishery on the banks of Newfoundland; and as this privilege would be of no fignification without fome harbour for the protection of her fishermen, the king of England should restore Cape Breton; in which case no fortification of any kind should be raised in any part of that island: that France should restore to Great Britain the island of Minorca, and St. Philip's fort, with all the artillery found in it at the time of its reduction; in confideration of which, the king of

An. 1761.

of England should agree to the restitution of Guadalupe and Mariegalante, in the same condition as when they were fubdued: that, with respect to the neutral islands, Dominica, St. Vincent, St. Lucia, and Tobago, the two first should remain in possession of the Caribbee Indians, under the protection of France, according to the treaty concluded in the year one thousand six hundred and sixty: otherwise, that the four islands should remain absolutely neutral; or that only the two possessed by the Caribbees, should be declared neutral; while England takes poffession of Tobago, and France occupies St. Lucia: that the East India companies of the two nations should mutually refrain from hoftilities, and the treaty mentioned above ferve as the basis of a new pacification in Asia: that, as the French colonies in South America cannot sublist without negroes, which were furnished from the fettlements of Senegal and Goree; and as these fettlements bring no real advantage to the crown of Great Britain, one of them should be given up and guarantied to France by his Britannic majesty: that Belleisle, with its fortifications and artillery, should be restored; in consideration of which, the French king should withdraw his army from Germany, leaving the navigation of the Maine free and open, and entirely evacuating the countries of Hanover, Heffe-Caffel, and Hanau; but these evacuations fhould be preceded by a ceffation of hostilities between the two crowns, to take place on the day of the ratification of the preliminaries or articles of the definitive treaty, not only in Germany, but in all other parts of the world: that no part of the army com-

commanded by prince Ferdinand of Brunf- An. 1761. wic, should, on any pretence whatsoever, join the troops of the king of Prussia, or act offensively against the empress-queen or her allies; in like manner, as no body of French forces should assist the empress-queen or her allies against the allies of Great Britain; that, after the evacuations proposed, the army commanded by the marechal de Broglio, should retire and occupy Frankfort on the Maine. while that under the marechal de Soubife should retreat to Wesel and Gueldres, on the Lower Rhine: that, as the king of Pruffia's dominions on the Lower Rhine have been conquered for the empressqueen, and the towns are actually governed in her name, the French king could not undertake to evacuate them, without the consent of that princess; but this point would be discussed in the congress of Augsburg; nevertheless, he would engage, whenever his Britannic majesty should think proper to recall his national troops from Germany, to withdraw double the number of French troops from the Higher and Lower Rhine, and leave no more in those countries than should be proportioned to the number there retained in the pay of Great Britain: that all further conquests which may be made by either power before the ratification of the treaty, should be restored without difficulty or compensation: that the captures which England made by fea before the declaration of war, form an object of restitution which the French king would gladly fubmit to the justice of his Britannic majesty, and the determination of English courts of judicature, that subjects trading under the faith of treaties, and under the

An. 1761. protection of the law of nations, ought not to fuffer from misunderstandings which may arise in the cabinets of princes, before these misunderstandings are publicly known: that the practice of declaring war was established by the law of nations, to make subjects acquainted with the quarrels of their sovereigns, that they might take care of their persons and effects; without which notice there would be no public fafety, and every individual must be in fear and danger the moment he passed the confines of his own country. If these principles are incontestible, it will be proper to compare the time when the captures were made, with the date of the declaration of war; and no prize taken anterior to this declaration can be deemed legal, without overturning the most facred of human institutions. Should it be alledged they were made by way of reprifal, for hostilities which the French had committed in America, this objection was anticipated by observing that there was no fort of affinity between hostilities pretended to be commenced at Fort du Quesne on the Ohio, and ships taken trading among the islands of the West Indies: that such hostilities might be the motives of declaring war; but the effects could not take place before that declaration was published; and it would be unjust to aggrieve innocent individuals, ignorant of the facts and circumstances of remote hostilities which have kindled the slames of a general war between two nations. Moved by these considerations, the French king demanded an indemnification for his subjects, for the losses they had fustained before the war commenced, without pretending to reclaim his own ships of war taken before -030 before that declaration. Finally, he offered to An. 1761. guarantee the succession of the present royal family to the throne of Great Britain; and proposed, that immediately after the ratification of the peace, the prisoners on both sides should be fet at liberty, and re-conveyed to their own country without ranfom. Together with this memorial, monsieur de Buffy Memorial delivered to the English ministry, another of a very relating fingular nature, importing, that the disputes subfifting between Spain and England gave his most Christian majesty cause to apprehend a new war in Europe and America, unless they could be now adjusted: that the Spanish monarch had communicated to him the three points of discussion, namely, the restitution of some ships taken in the course of the present war, under Spanish colours; the liberty claimed by the Spanish nation to fish on the banks of Newfoundland; and the destruction of the settlements made by the English on the Spanish territories in the Bay of Honduras. Besides these points, the court of Madrid had lately given the French king to understand, that he had pretensions to the neutral islands, which he would not fail to explain upon a proper occasion. His most Christian majesty, therefore, passionately desired that these differences might be amicably terminated; and that the king of Spain should be invited to guarantee the treaty between the two crowns; because, should they kindle up a new war, he should be obliged to perform his engagements to his allies. Whether this remonstrance was an expedient calculated to preponderate against the demand with respect to the demolition of Dunkirk, or really the effect to Spain.

An. 1761. effect of the French king's earnest desire to establish peace on the most solid foundation, we cannot pretend to determine. Perhaps, according to the opinion of some politicians, it was artfully thrown in as an obstacle to the peace, which the court of Verfailles never fincerely defired, or at least was now rendered unnecessary by a more intimate connection with Spain. Certain it is, the ministers of France had long been employing all their art and influence to inspire the Spanish monarch with jealousy at the growing power of Great-Britain, her absolute empire at sea, and her extenfive conquests in America; and it is equally certain that these intrigues, at the long run, answered the end proposed. The two French memorials were accompanied by a third notification, fignifying, that the empress queen had consented to a particular peace between France and England, on these terms, and these only: That France should, for her benefit, keep possession of the countries belonging to the king of Prussia: that the king of Great Britain, elector of Hanover, should afford no longer any affistance, either in troops or subsidies, to the Prusfian monarch, in like manner as France should be restricted with respect to the empress-queen and her allies. If these infinuations were intended to defeat the declared purpole of the negociation, they could not have been better contrived. The court of London received them with difdain, as infults upon the dignity and good faith of Great Britain. Mr. Secretary Pitt, in a letter to Mr. Buffy, declared his master would not suffer the disputes with Spain, to be intermingled in any shape in the ne-

Rejected with difdain by theBritish ministry.

gociation

gociation for peace; that the bare mention of such An. 1761. an idea would be confidered as an affront; and that the memorial relating to the king of Prussia could not be admitted without derogating from the honour of Great Britain, and that inviolable fidelity with which the king of England was determined to fulfil his engagements towards his allies. A memorial to the same purpose was transmitted to the court of Versailles, couched in such high terms. as could not fail to give umbrage to a power remarkable for its pride and arrogance. Had the French king been infincere in his professions, he was now furnished with the fairest pretexts for breaking off the negociation. England in her demand relating to Dunkirk, had undoubtedly receded from the first agreement of treating on the uti possidetis: she had rejected, with disdain, the sole condition on which the allies of Lewis had agreed to a separate peace between France and Great Britain: she had refused with a mixture of indignation and contempt, the memorial relating to the disputes with Spain; and Belleisle being taken, France had nothing farther to fear from that quarter. This therefore was the juncture at which the ministry of Versailles might have broke off the conferences, without affording any just handle for impeaching their fincerity. Yet this step they carefully avoided. To the last proposals of Great-Britain, they answered by an ultimatum, in which they made new concessions. They even condefcended to make an apology for having proposed a discussion of the points in dispute with Spain; and the conde de Fuentes, who refided as ambaffador from

An. 1761.

from Spain at the court of London, delivered to Mr. Pitt, by order of his master, such an explanation of that memorial, as seemed well adapted to remove any unfavourable impression that might have been produced*. Mr. de Bussy received pri-

Note from the Spanish ambassador to Mr. Pitt.

" The most Christian king, who fincerely wishes that the peace now under confideration between France and England, may be rendered of equal utility and duration, communicated, in the beginning, his intentions to my mafter, expressing the pleafure with which he feized that opportunity to demonstrate his respectful sense of the repeated offers his catholic majesty had made both to him and England, in order to facilitate a proper and permanent reconciliation.

"Moved by these motives, so reasonable and sincere, his most Christian majesty proposed to the king my master, that he should grant his guarantee in the treaty, which might be equally useful to France and England; at the same time testifying the sincerity of his own disposition, with respect to the sacrifices he proposed to make, in order to restore the tranquillity of Europe, by a solid and honourable peace.

"These proceedings of his most Christian majesty could not but infinitely oblige the king my master, who entertained an uniformity of fentiments, ever desirous to fulfil, by the most distinguished correspondence, all the engagements of confanguinity and mutual interest, by which the two monarchs are united especially as he discovered in the intentions of the king of France, that humanity and greatness of mind so peculiar to him, in feeking to render the peace as permanent as the viciflitude of human affairs would permit.

" With the same candour and fincerity the king my master acquainted his most Christian majesty, that he could wish the king of Great Britain had made no difficulty in agreeing to the guarantee connected with the confideration of the grievances fubfifting between Spain and England; having all the reafon in the world to believe that his Britannic majesty was equally disposed to terminate them in an amicable manner, according to the laws of reason and justice. This intimation from my mafter, induced the king of

France

vate instructions to relax in several articles: and An 1761. in particular was ordered to deliver a memorial concerning the merchant ships taken before the declaration of the war, in which the French miniftry endeavoured to prove that these prizes were made in defiance of the law of nations, as well as in direct violation of the treaties concluded at > mind of his Britannic majesty, a sensation entirely opposite to the true intentions his Britannic majesty the purity of his intentions for the re-establishment of peace, seeing, in proposing the guarantee of Spain, he demonstrates his fincere defire to fee those interests compromised, which may one day re-kindle the flames of war, which all pareither separate between France ties are now endeavouring to and England, or general be-

France to communicate to extinguish. "If the intentions of his most Christian majesty, and the king my master, are not both replete with good faith, my master flatters himself that his Britannic majesty will do him the justice to believe his views in particular were strictly fo; for, had they referred to any other aim, his Catholic majesty, consulting his own greatness, would have spoke in his own person, according to the dignity of his crown.

you, fir, that the king, my malter, will be furprised to hear, that the memorial of France should excite in the

"I cannot forbear telling of the two fovereigns. " His Catholic majefty nevertheless, will console himfelf for this interpretation, by feeing that progress which he has always wished to be made in the negociation of peace, tween all the belligerant powers: for it is his fincere defire to render it perpetual, by crushing every bud which may unfortunately produce another war.

" For this reason, the king my mafter flatters himself that his Britannic majesty, animated by the fame fentiments of humanity for the public tranquillity, will continue in the same intentions to terminate the disputes subfisting between England and a power which has given him fuch repeated proofs of friendship, at the same time it is proposed to establish peace through all Europe."

Utrecht

Numb. 37.

Final articles agreed to by England.

An. 1761. Utrecht and Aix-la-Chapelle. But these remonstrances had no effect upon the British ministry; which in the latter end of August transmitted the following articles to Verfailles, in answer to the ultimatum of France. "-I. The king of Great Britain still insists upon the intire and total cession of Canada and its dependencies, without any limits or exceptions whatfoever; as also upon the full and final cession of Cape Breton, and all the other islands in the gulph of St. Laurence. Canada, according to the line of its limits traced by the marquis of Vaudrueil himself, when he, as governor-general, furrendered that province, by capitulation, to the English general Amherst, comprehends on one side, the lakes Huron, Michigan, and that called Superior; and the faid line, drawn from the Red lake, embraces by a winding course the river Ouabache to its junction with the Ohio; from thence extending along this last river, inclusively to its confluence with the Miffiffippi. According to this definition of the limits by the French governor, the king reclaims the cession of Canada, a province which the court of France have offered a-new in its ultimatum to cede to his Britanic majesty, in the most extensive form, declared in the memorial of the proposals of peace dated on the thirteenth of With respect to the public profession and Tuly. exercise of the Roman-catholic religion in Canada, his Britannic majesty will indulge his new subjects with that liberty, to be enjoyed without interruption or molestation; and the French inhabitants or others who have been subject to the most Christian king in that country, shall have intire freedom and opportunity portunity to fell their effects, though to British fub. An. 1761. jects only, and transport them, without being impeded or hindered in their emigration, by any perfon on any pretence whatfoever, except that of debt or civil trespass, provided still that the time granted for this emigration, shall be limited to the term of one year, commencing at the ratification of the definitive treaty.-II. As for the line drawn from Rio Perdido, contained in a notification delivered by monsieur de Bussy, on the eighteenth day of August, concerning the limits of Louisiana, his majesty cannot but reject such an unexpected proposal, as altogether inadmissible on these two accounts: The faid line, under colour of fixing the limits of Louifiana, includes in that province extensive countries, which, with the posts and forts that command them. the marquis de Vaudreuil hath furrendered, by the most folemn capitulation, to his Britannick majesty, under the definition of Canada; of consequence, however contentious the respective pretensions of the two crowns might have been before the war, particularly with respect to the course of the Ohio, and the territories adjacent, all the contending titles are, fince the furrender of Canada, and the line of its limits traced by the marquis de Vaudreuil, united, and without contradiction, become valid, in confirming to Great Britain the possession of these countries, together with the other parts of The line proposed for ascertaining the Canada. limits of Louisiana cannot be admitted, because it would comprehend on the fide of Carolina, very extensive countries and numerous nations, which have always been considered as under the protection U 2

of

An. 1761. of the king; a connection which his majesty has no intention to renounce, though, for the benefit of peace, he might consent to leave the intermediate countries that are under the protection of Great-Britain, more particularly those inhabited by the Cherokees, Creeks, Chickefaws, Chactaws, and other nations situated between the British settlements and the river Mississippi -III. The king refers himself to the third article of the ultimatum of England, touching the cession of Senegal and its dependencies, as well as of the island of Goree, in the most ample manner, as specified in the said article; and his majesty is willing to repeat what has been declared by Mr. Stanley, That if the court of France would suggest any reasonable plan for supplying their subjects with negroes, that should not be very prejudicial to the advantages which the British subjects possess in Africa, the king would willingly take it into confideration.-IV. The important privilege of fishing and curing cod in a certain specified part on the coast of Newfoundland, granted to the subjects of France by the thirteenth article of the treatty of Utrecht, hath not been refused by England, but only connected with a reciprocal fatisfaction on the part of France, concerning the indispensible object of Dunkirk; a satisfaction which the king has exacted, and does exact: it is therefore on condition that the town and harbour of Dunkirk shall be reduced to the condition prescribed by the last treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, that his majesty will consent to renew to France, by the future treaty of peace, the privilege of taking and curing fish, by virtue of the treaty of of Utrecht, upon the said district of Newfound- An. 1761. land. With respect to the ulterior demand which his Christian majetty has made, that his subjects may be allowed to fish in the gulph of St. Laurence, and there enjoy a harbour without fortifications, subject to the inspection of England, as proposed by the duke of Choiseul, in his conference on that subject, with Mr. Stanley, which harbour shall simply serve as a shelter to the French fishing vessels in those seas; the king, in order to convince his most Christian majesty, and all mankind, of his fincere defire after peace, will confent to allow the French subjects to fish in the gulph of St. Laurence, on this express condition; namely, That the faid subjects of France shall abstain from that particular fishery upon all the coasts belonging to Great Britain, either of the continent, or of the islands situated in the said gulph of St. Laurence, which fishery, the possessors only of the said coasts have constantly enjoyed, and always exercised, excepting nevertheless the privilege granted by the thirteenth article of the treaty of Utrecht, to the subjects of France, to take and cure cod in a certain specified part upon the coast of Newfoundland, which privilege it is proposed shall be renewed to France, as mentioned above. The king will confent to cede to his most Christian majesty, the island of St. Peter, with its harbour; which island, in respect to that part of Newfoundland lying betweeen the bay of Placentia and the bay of Fortune, is fituated west, south-west, its harbour opening to the north-east, the interior part of which harbour is called Bourguay: the island of St. Peter, U 3 which

e

1-

0

An. 1761. which the king is willing to cede, is separated by a fmall ftrait from another island, known by the name of Maquelon, or Michelon, to the northward of the faid island of St. Peter. But, to the cession of this island, as above, the king will fix four indispensible conditions. 1. France shall not, under any pretext or denomination whatever, build fortifications in the faid island, or its harbour, nor maintain troops, nor have any military establishment whatever upon it. 2. The faid island and harbour shall serve as shelter only to the fishing vessels of the French nation; and France shall not be at liberty to share the said convenience of shelter with the fishing, or other vessels of any other nation whatsoever. 3. The possession of the island of St. Peter, as above, shall not be deemed in any case to transfer, attribute, or share, in any manner, the truft, right, or privilege of fishing and drying cod in any other part of the coasts of Newfoundland, beyond the district exprefly articled and fixed for that purpose, by the thirteenth article of the treaty of Utrecht; that is to fay, "A loco Cap Bonavista nuncupato, usque ad extremitatem ejusdem insulæ septentrionalem, indique ad latus occidentale recurrendo, usque ad locum Pointe-Riche appellatum *." 4. By virtue of the cellion of the said island, as above, an English commissary shall be at liberty to refide upon the spot; and the commander of the

From the place called ifland, and thence running Cape Bonavista, to the northern extremity of the faid minated Pointe-Riche.

British squadron at Newfoundland may, from time An. 1761. to time, visit the said island and harbour of St. Peter, to see that the above specified stipulations be duly observed .- The king consents to restore to his most Christian majesty, 1. The important conquest of Belleisle, with the artillery, &c. found therein at the reduction of the faid island. 2. His majesty consents to restore to the most Christian king, the fertile and opulent island of Guadalupe. with that of Mariegalante, and the artillery, &c. there found, at the conquest of the said islands. The island of Minorca, with St. Philip's fort, shall be restored to his Britannic majesty, in the same condition, including the artillery, &c. as when attacked and taken. As to the restitution and evacuation of the conquests made by France upon any of the king's allies in Germany, particularly Wefel, and the other places and territories of the king of Prussia, his majesty still insists upon what is demanded in relation to that affair, in the feventh article of the ultimatum of England; it being always understood, that all the places belonging to the king's allies in Germany, shall be restored, with the artillery, &c. found in them at the time of their reduction. With respect to the succours to be furnished by the crown of Great Britain to his Prussian majesty, as an auxiliary, after the ratification of the separate peace between Great Britain and France, his majesty persists in the same unshaken resolution which he has declared from the first opening of the prefent negociation, that he will not cease to fuccour constantly his ally the king of Prussia, with efficacy and good faith, in order to attain the falu-U 4

tary

An. 1761. tary aim of a general pacification in Germany. In these sentiments, his majesty, far from having proposed that France shall be at liberty to send armies into Silesia, " without being limited to the number stipulated in her actual engagements with the court of Vienna," a propofal to be found in no part of the ultimatum of England, he hath only declared, as the thirteenth article of the faid ultimatum shews, that Great Britain and France shall be at liberty to support, as auxiliaries, their respective allies, in the particular dispute for the recovery of Silesia, according to the engagements which each crown has contracted. The king declares, at the same time, that he has neither the intention nor the power to forbid and inhibit any foreign troops from entering into the service and the pay of the king of Prussia, howfoever disposed his majesty might be to consent that he shall not furnish, but in subsidies only, the fuccours which Great Britain shall think proper, in conformity with her engagements, to afford his Prussian majesty. With respect to the prizes taken after the commencement of hosfilities, though before the formality of declaring war, the king perfifts in his opinion, that such a demand on the part of France, is neither just nor defensible, according to the most incontestible principles of the laws of war and of nations. As to the evacuation of Oftend and Nieuport, the king cannot help referring to the motives founded on the most express and irrevocable flipulations in the most solemn treaties, specified in the eleventh article of the ultimatum of Great Britain, and to his declaration relating to that subject; and his majesty confides in the good faith of the declaration made on the part of his most An. 1761. Christian majesty, in the eleventh article of the ultimatum of France, namely, that it never was the intention of his most Christian majesty to keep posfession of those places after the re-establishment of peace. With respect to the cessation of hostilities, the king perfifts entirely in the fentiments expressed in the twelfth article of the British ultimatum. As to the concerns of the French East India company, reference must be had to the ninth article of the ultimatum of England, with respect to which there feems to be no difagreement. In regard to the prifoners of war, the two crowns feem to be entirely agreed.-By this answer the court of France must perceive the rectitude of the king's intentions, as well as the moderation he shews in promoting the means of reconciliation with his most Christian majesty."

This answer, couched in such a peremptory stile Final reas could not but mortify the pride of France, might ply of have been deemed another sufficient excuse for the anbreaking off the negociation, had the court of Ver- fwer of failles wanted nothing more than a specious pretext for this purpose: but, after several fruitless conferences between the duke de Choiseul and Mr. Stanley, the French ministry thought proper to make further concessions, in a new memorial to the court of London, dated on the ninth day of September. In this paper the French king, after the preamble, declaring, that in case the negociation should not succeed, all the concessions made in the course of it should be null and of no effect, proceeds to this purpose: " The king has said in his first memorial of proposals, as well as in his ultima.

Great Britain. An. 1761. tum, that he would cede and guarantee to England the possession of Canada, in the most extenfive form; his majesty repeats that offer; and even without discussing the line of limits, traced in a chart or map presented by Mr. Stanley; as that line demanded by England is doubtless the most extenfive form that can be given to the cession, the king is willing to grant it, without further question. His majesty had affixed four conditions to his guarantee; and to these England does not seem averse: the king only thinks the term of one year too short for the emigration of the French and the fale of their effects; and defires it may be protracted to two years, or eighteen months at least. As the court of England has, in the first article of its anfwer relating to the entire and total cession of Canada, as agreed upon between the two courts, added the word dependencies, it will be necessary to explain what is meant by the word dependencies, that the cession may not produce disputes in the sequel. paragraph concerning the limits of Louisiana, contained in the second article of England's answer, is allowed by France: the fecond paragraph is neither just nor clearly expressed; it is proposed therefore that it shall be definitively explained in the following terms: " The intermediate Indian nations, fituated between the lakes and the Mississippi, within the line described, shall be neutral and independent, under the protection of the king of France; and those without the line, on the side of the English possessions, shall also be neutral and independent, under the protection of the king of England. The English traders shall not be allowed to visit the Indian dian nations on either fide of the line; but the faid An. 1761. nations shall not be abridged of the liberty which they have hitherto enjoyed of trafficking with both French and English." Although France is very senfible how contrary it is to the views of reconciliation, for the party that cedes to propole to the party which has conquered, and means to preferve its conquests, the cession of countries which are not very well known; although this form of proceeding demanded by England, is without doubt subject to numberless difficulties, nevertheless, the king, in order to demonstrate his readiness to embrace every temperament tending to reconcile the two courts, freely declares to England, that he will guarantee to that crown the possession of Senegal and Goree, provided England will guarantee to France the poffession of her settlements at Anamaboe and Acra. The fourth article of the answer comprehends several objects, and each requires a particular explanation. England still joins together the liberty of fishing on part of the island of Newfoundland, stipulated to France in the thirteenth article of the treaty of Utrecht, with the ninth article of the same treaty, relating to the demolition of Dunkirk. The fourth and last answer which shall be given to England on this head, is, that thefe two stipulations in the treaty of Utrecht, have no other affinity, one with another, but that of their being both comprised in the fame treaty; and that the concession explained in favour of the French, in the thirteenth article of that treaty, is a compensation for the cession of Newfoundland and Annapolis Royal, made on the part of France to England, by the twelfth

An. 1761. twelfth and thirteenth articles of the same treaty. But that the two courts may come to a right understanding on this subject, and in order to facilitate the peace, the king confents to demolish the works which have been made for the defence of the harbour of Dunkirk fince the beginning of that war. to fill up the bason which would contain ships of war, and destroy the buildings belonging to the rope-work; but, at the same time, his majesty will allow the merchant-harbour, which cannot receive even a frigate, to remain for the mutual advantage of England and France. He will engage that there shall be no maritime, military establishment in that fea-port; but he will leave the wet ditch or lunette round the place, which was made for the falubrity of the air and the health of the inhabitants. the fishing on the banks of Newfoundland, the king expects that the twelfth article in the treaty of Utrecht shall be confirmed. In regard to the conditition proposed by England, concerning the liberty of fishing allowed to belong to the French, in the gulph of St. Laurence, France agrees, that, exclusive of the part of Newfoundland prescribed in the thirteenth article of the treaty of Utrecht, the French, except in case of accident, shall not come upon the coasts belonging to England, in the gulph of St. Laurence, either to dry their fish or spread their nets; but, bating these two exceptions, the French shall be at liberty to fish, without molestation, in every part of the faid gulph of St. Laurence. As to the cession of the island of St. Peter, the smallness of that island, and its situation so near Placentia, give the king reason to believe that such a shelter Hillow:

a shelter would be altogether illusive, and serve ra- An. 1761. ther to create disputes between the two nations, than facilitate the fishery of the French subjects. The king had demanded of England the island of Cape Breton or St. John; he had even restricted himself to the inconsiderable island of Canceau; he now repeats the same proposal to his Britannic majesty; or if the king of England, for reasons unknown in France, cannot agree to the cession of Canceau; it is proposed he shall add to the island of St. Peter, the cession of the island of Maquelon, or Michelon, two islands which, joined together, do not exceed three leagues in extent. Inconfiderable as these settlements are, and though, properly speaking, they form but one island, yet the king will accept of them, and even impose upon himself this condition; That there shall not be in either of these islands, nor in Canceau, provided England should part with this last, any military establishment: France will only maintain a guard of fifty men to support the execution of the police, which it will be necessary to maintain in those islands. The king will, as much as possible, considering the weakness of this guard, prevent all foreign vessels, even the English themselves, from going ashore on those islands. France does not pretend to fish and dry cod on the coast of Newfoundland, in any other way but according to the stipulation in the thirteenth article of the treaty of Utrecht, provided it be understood that the French have liberty to take and dry their fish on the coast of St. Peter and Michelon. Finally, the king agrees that an English commissary shall reside in the said islands, to fee that the conditions stipulated in the treaty shall be punctually fulfilled. The division of the four neutral islands between the two courts, ought to be specified in the preliminaries: France agrees to any division of these islands that shall be proposed by England, provided the island of St. Lucie shall be declared part of the share assigned to France. The king, without flaying to dispute particulars, confents to the fixth and feventh articles, relating to the restitution of Guadalupe, Mariegalante, Belleisle, and Minorca. As to the eighth article, relating to the evacuation of places in Germany, the king refers to the feventh article of his ultimatum. not in his power to evacuate the countries belonging to his ally the empress-queen. The ninth article of England's answer requires explanation; for it is couched in fuch a manner, that the fense of it is not eafily understood: it supposes engagements between the king and the empress, and between England and Pruffia, which are not mutually known to the two courts of Versailles and London. It is not imagined in France, that the king of England has not influence to prevent the allies of his crown, fuch as the fovereigns of Hanover, Hesse-Cassel, and Brunswic, from joining their troops to those of the king of Prussia; but, without launching into useless discussions, the king, though determined, for the fake of peace, to make the most considerable facrifices, is at the same time irrevocably resolved, to grant nothing in the future treaty of peace, but what shall be conformable to the stipulations by which he is engaged with his allies. It is with their consent and concurrence that the king, in relation to the war of Westphalia, proposed to England the tenth An. 1761. article of the memorial, containing his majesty's proposals, and the feventh and thirteenth articles of the ultimatum of France. The king adheres to these three articles, in answer to the eighth and ninth articles in the answer of England; resolved, nevertheless, to treat upon any new proposals of England, relative to those objects; proposals which shall be communicated to the king's allies, and accepted by his majesty, with the consent of the empress, provided they shall not be contrary to the engagements subsisting between him and that princess.—France is still of opinion, that the king's proposals, relating to the prizes taken from his subjects before the declaration of war, are so just, that he is obliged to support them, and refers himself on that head, to the twelfth article of his propofals. The king, after the figning of the treaty, or even of the preliminaries, will deliver to the king of England a paper figned with his own hand, containing a declaration, that it never was his intention to unite the towns of Oftend and Nieuport to his dominions. France will agree to the terms proposed for a ceffation of hostilities, provided they are such as cannot be difadvantageous to either crown. France adopts the negociation between the East India companies of the two nations, on condition that it shall be terminated at the same time as that of the two crowns; for this purpose, they shall name their commissioners, and begin their negociation without loss of time. The fourteenth article, relating to the exchange of prisoners, will meet with no difficulty: but the court of England will de justice to the considerable advances made by France in this memorial, in order to facilitate a reconciliation between the two crowns.—To this memorial, which was delivered on the thirteenth day of September, the British ministry deigned not to make the least reply. Mr. Stanley was recalled from Paris, and the French minister returned to his own country; thus the negociation was broke off, and the events of war were left to the determination of fortune.

An. 1761.

An. 1761.

Reflectionsupon the negociation.

If we consider the mortifications which France digested in filence, and the facrifices she offered to make for the re-establishment of peace; that as foon as the understood how deeply the court of London refented her mentioning the Spanish claims, she dropped that subject entirely; that she ceded all Canada, according to the limits prescribed by the English government, together with the island of Cape Breton, and the fettlements of Senegal and Goree on the coast of Africa; that she accepted of the privilege granted to her subjects, of fishing in the gulph of St. Laurence, upon the mortifying terms which England proposed; that she acquiesced in the demolition of Dunkirk; agreed to restore Minorca; to evacuate Nieuport and Oftend; and to leave the affairs of the East India company to the discussion of commissaries; we can hardly doubt the fincerity of her advances. On the other hand, if we reflect upon the terms offered by England, we shall find equal cause for astonishment and con-The war was expressly undertaken with a cern. view to the fecurity of the British settlements in North America, exposed to the incroachments of the French, and to the inroads of the Indians, ac- An. 17614 tuated by French influence. In the profecution of the war, France was deprived of all Canada, and their influence of course extinguished through all the Indian nations, inhabiting or bordering on that vast country. The whole extent of the lakes, together with the course of the river St. Laurence, including the islands fituated in the gulph of St. Laurence. were united to the British dominion. Nothing now remained but the conquest of Louisiana, to confirm the fecurity of the English colonies beyond all fear of alarm, to render all the Indian nations of N. America intirely dependant on the British government, and to engross the whole fur-trade of that immense continent. These purposes can never be answered while the French continue to have access by the Mississippi, to the inland parts of America. The colony of Louisiana, which at the commencement of the war was weak and inconfiderable, and might have been reduced by a handful of troops. without interfering with any other capital operation, is now confiderably strengthened and reinforced; and, no doubt, will every day increase in wealth, extent, and number of people. avenue, our enterprising neighbours can penetrate to the back of all our fettlements; rival our traders, in the commerce of the country, by supplying the natives with necessaries cheaper than they can be afforded by the subjects of Great Britain; prosecute the arts of infinuation, and maintain their ascendancy in such a manner as to be always able to instigate the remote Indians to fall occasionally upon the British colonies. From these considerations the Numb. 37. reader reader may judge of the importance of Louisiana, which hath been left unattempted by the arms of Great Britain; and so tamely overlooked in the course of the negociation. The fishery in the gulph of St. Laurence, and on the banks of Newfoundland, constituted one great source of wealth to France, and was undoubtedly her chief nursery for feamen; confequently the loss of it must have been feverely felt in that nation: but, the English m-y voluntarily offered to readmit her to a participation of this advantage, which, we will venture to fay, was more than equivalent to all that she forfeited by the entire cession of Canada. The produce of Guadalupe is more than three times the value of what Canada adds to the wealth of Great Britain; yet the crown of E- agreed without hesitation to restore this opulent and important acquifition. If fuch effential facrifices were made on both fides, what then obstructed the pacification? -The French king declared he could not give up Westl in Germany, which he had garrisoned in the name of the empress queen; a place which the king of Prussia had of himself abandoned: and the British government refused to restore those merchant-ships which had been taken before the declaration of war. It must be allowed, therefore, that E-, rather than make restitution of a few hundred thousand pounds plundered from the subjects of France, while they traded secure on the faith of treaties, chose to prosecute the war, at the annual expence of twelve millions; or that this enormous charge, together with the expence of British blood, and the risque of fortune's inconstancy, was a sacrifice fice made to the interest of a German ally, who had An. 1761. already drained fo much from the nation, which his friendship or animosity could not possibly either fuccour or affect .- It may be asked, if the French king was in reality fo earnestly desirous of peace, why did not he throw these two inconsiderable articles into the scale, with so many concessions of feemingly greater importance? The answer is obvious. The progress of the English conquests, and the imperative manner in which they dictated the terms of peace, had, by this time, effectually arroused the jealousy and disgust of the court of Madrid, which being moreover convinced of the French king's moderation, offered to supply him with pecuniary fuccours; and these were all that he wanted to maintain a war in Germany, by which he well knew Great Britain would be in a few years utterly impoverished. In that case he foresaw England would be exposed to a new war with Spain, which could not fail to increase her incumbrances; and that, in the profecution of fuch accumulated hostilities against her, he should probably recover some of the territories she had subdued .- That this was not meer conjecture, appeared from the conduct of Spain, which, from this period, feemed to provoke a rupture with Great Britain. In accounting for the conduct of princes, we must not always look for national motives. The ties of confanguinity, or other private connections, have not unfrequently preponderated against the interest of a whole kingdom. Perhaps the Spanish monarch was affected by this kind of influence. Confidering the commercial benefits which the subjects of that monarchy

An. 1761.

X 2

it

n

q

in

he

he

1-a-

nat

n-

cts

of

ual

ous

od.

cri-

fice

An. 1761. narchy derived from a neutrality, while France and England were engaged in a war; confidering the powerful navy of Great Britain, with which the ocean was overspread; the catholic king could not, with any regard to the advantage or fafety of his fubjects, engage in his hostilities with England, unless he either believed the actually affected despotifm by fea, or hoped her finances were already so exhausted, that in a little time she must truckle to the additional power of France, reinforced by Spain; and in that case he should be able to vindicate by force those pretentions which he never could establish by dint of negociation.

Mr. Pitt religns the feals.

Mr. Pitt having noted in the Catholic king's conduct many flagrant instances of partiality, in favour of the enemies of Great Britain; and received intimation that a private treaty was lately concluded between the courts of Verfailles and Madrid; is faid to have expatiated upon these particulars in council; to have proposed that an armament should immediately proceed to the Mediterranean, and strike some stroke of importance, without further formality, in case the ministry of Spain should refuse to give instant satisfaction to the court of Great Britain. He observed, that such a spirited measure would either intimidate the court of Madrid into compliance, so as to detach it intirely from the interest of France, or oblige them to hazard their homeward bound flota, loaden with treasure, to the chance of being taken by the English cruisers; as well as to expose their sea-ports to the operations of the British armament, before they could be put in a proper posture of defence. He narchy

He declared that should his proposal be rejected or An. 1761. postponed, he would refign his employment, and withdraw himself from his majesty's councils; and the same declaration was made by the earl Temple, after he had harangued in support of the secretary's The other members considered this proposal as a delicate step not to be hazarded in the present conjuncture. The Spanish king's partiality in favour of France was at best but doubtful, and the contents of the late treaty between the houses of Bourbon were altogether unknown. one state has cause of complaint or suspicion against another, the law of nations, and of reason, prescribes, that recourse should be first had to expostulation and demands of fatisfaction. thefe are refused, the power aggrieved is at liberty to redress itself by force of arms, after having given fair warning of hostile intentions, according to the forms established among civilized nations. Unless these forms are observed, there is no faith in the law of nations, no fecurity for commerce, and no difference between the justifiable operations of war, and the most arbitrary acts of piracy and usurpation: for if every power is at liberty to interpret its pretended grievances into aggression, and to retaliate this supposed aggression by immediate acts of hostility, commenced without remonstrance or denunciation; all those individuals, who by commerce and communication fustain the intercourse among the nations, forming as it were one great community of human nature, must be perpetually exposed to violence and peculation. Thus trade and navigation will be discouraged; the interests of X 3

-

An. 1761. of humanity decline, and mankind relapse into a state of the most selfish barbarity. England has nothing to fear from a war with Spain, begun under proper auspices, and maintained on British principles; on the contrary, Spain has every thing to fear from the naval power of Great Britain, both in Europe and America. But at a juncture when England is already exhausted by such an expensive war as history cannot parallel; when she groans under a debt of one hundred and thirty millions: when she has undertaken to meet the power of France on the continent, where alone that power can be formidable, and where alone she is unequal to the expence which a war with that nation would occasion; to precipitate herself into a rupture with Spain, whose treasures will enable France to protract that expence, is a measure which England ought to avoid with all the caution that is confiftent with the dignity of her own importance. Some regard was likewife due to the following confiderations. England, at this period, derived confiderable advantages from her trade with Spain. A great number of British merchants and factors were fettled in different parts of that kingdom, and concerned in the remittances by the flota from the West Indies: all these would have been inevitably ruined by a precipitation of hostilities. The catholic king had a numerous navy; and the active commerce which his subjects had lately carried on, afforded a sufficient number of seamen to equip a very formidable squadron, to act in conjunction with the other enemies of Great Britain.

cut is house to the ed live hear great Thefe,

An. 17612 Is gratified with a pension.

Thefe, in all probability, were the reasons which induced all the other ministers of the privy-council to diffent from the opinion of the fecretary of state, who forthwith refigned his employment, on the ninth day of October; and his example was immediately followed by his brother-in-law, the earl Temple. Notwithstanding this abrupt secession, the king, with a generofity peculiar to himfelf, gratified him for his past services with a yearly pension of three thousand pounds, to be continued even after his decease, during the survivancy of his lady and fon; and this gratuity was reinforced with the title of baroness of Chatham to his lidy, and that of baron to her heirs male, Mr. Pitt for his own person declining the distinction of nobility. This event excited fuch a loud clamour as had not been heard fince the trial of admiral Byng. divided the nation into violent factions, and deluged the public with inundations of pamphlets, papers, and pasquinades. The friends and admirers of Mr. P- exclaimed, that after he had raised the nation from the lowest state of contempt and despondency, to the highest pinnacle of glory and exultation, he was ungratefully thwarted in his defigns for the public good, and thrust from the helm at the most critical juncture, by a cabal of wicked and worthless men, whose misconduct had formerly brought the common-wealth to the verge of ruin. They expatiated upon the wonderful talents of the late minister: they enumerated the successes of the British arms during the period of his administration: they ascribed them wholly and solely to the wisdom of his plans and the vigour of his coun-

n

An. 1761.

fels: they affirmed, that had his propofal with respect to Spain been embraced, the catholic king would have been obliged to renounce his connection with the French monarch; or his homeward bound flota, laden with treasure, would have fallen into the hands of the English, and indemnified them for the expence of the war; and, in all probability, the port and city of Cadiz would have been fubdued by a bold effort of the British armament; whereas, now that he no longer animated the machine of government, its councils would degenerate into timidity, and the administration of affairs revert into the old channel, leading to diffidence, difgrace, and diffraction. Another party were not less vehement in their invectives against the late They taxed him with inconfiftency, want of principle, and the most turbulent ambition. They afferted, that he had no sooner forced himself into the administration by dint of popularity, than he turned tail to those very principles by the profession of which that popularity was acquired: that he plunged with the most desperate precipitation into those continental measures, against which it had been the business of his life to declaim: that he adopted this new system, so contrary to his former maxims and folemn declarations, without any change of circumstance that should indicate a change of measures; without specifying any cause, or adducing one reason for the satisfaction of his country: that he not only espoused those interests which he had fo often stigmatized as disgraceful to the crown and pernicious to the kingdom; but efboused them with such warmth as no former minifler flerdurst avow, without running the risque of falling An. 1761 a facrifice to popular refentment: that enamoured of this new idol, he squandered upon it immense fums, fo as to impoverish his country, and accumulate the load of her debts to fuch a degree, that the could scarce crouch under her burthen. They afferted, that all his military projects were either idle, frivolous, or foreign to the interest of Great-Britain; and that no part of the success that had crowned her arms, either flowed from any plan which he had formed, or was atchieved by officers whom he had recommended: that he had left the conquest of Louisiana, which was really a British measure, unattempted, in order to prosecute the war in Westphalia, an aim equally spurious and destructive to the interests of Great Britain ; and profecuted it accordingly at an incredible expence of blood and treasure, without being able to defend either the countries or the allies which he had fo injudiciously taken into his protection: that perceiving the nation began to open their eyes to the abfurdity and ruinous confequences of fuch connections; that the king of Prussia was surrounded with enemies, against whom he could not possibly contend much longer; that the French were poffeffed of Heffe-Caffel and Hanover; and the forces payed by England in the most imminent danger of being difarmed with difgrace; he had exercifed his invention to find fome specious pretence for quitting the reins he could no longer manage with any degree of reputation; and for transferring, at the same time, the attention of the public to another object, in which their passions would be more warmly interested: that for this purpose he had con-contrived the proposal of a Spanish war, which could not fail to dazzle the eyes of the people, already intoxicated with conquest; accordingly, after having steered the vessel of the common-wealth into a dangerous straight, replete with rocks and quickfands, he had deserted the helm in the midst of the tempest he had raised, leaving his country to fink or swim as accident should determine, and his fellow-servants in the ministry the herculean task of remedying the mischiefs he had brewed, or the hardship of being censured for miscarriages resulting from the errors of his administration. In a word, he was accused of having misconducted the war, betrayed the interests, and profused the treasures of his country; of having infulted his indulgent fovereign, deferted him in the day of trouble, embroiled him with his allies abroad, and made him uneasy with his subjects at home. This was, no doubt, the language of party spleen and inveterate malice. Mr. P-t himself seemed to think, not only that his duty dictated the step he had taken, but that his personal safety depended upon his withdrawing himfelf from councils which he was no longer permitted to guide. He condescended to justify himself, in a letter to a certain individual in the city of London, who in his answer declared. that he and his fellow-citizens were perfectly fatiffied with the conduct of the late S-y *.

An. 1761.

^{*} A Letter from a Right Hon. Person to - in the City.

[&]quot; Dear Sir, Oct. 1761:

[&]quot; Finding, to my great furprife, that the cause and manner of my refigning the feals, are grofly misrepresented in the city, as well as that the most gracious and fpontaneous murks of his majesty's approbation of my fervices, which marks

These letters being published, served only to render the altercation of the two parties more acri-only to An. 1761.

nore acrimonious. by the city of London.

marks followed my refignation, have been infamoufly traduced as a bargain for my forfaking the Public, I am under a necessity of declaring the truth of both thefe facts, in a manner which I am fure no gentleman will contradict. A difference of opinion with regard to measures to be taken against Spain, of the highest importance to the honour of the crown, and to the most essential national interefts, (and this founded on what Spain had already done, not on what that court may farther intend to do) was the cause of my refigning the seals. Lord Temple and I submitted in writing, and figned by us, our most humble sentiments to his majesty, which being over ruled by the united opinion of all the rest of the king's fervants, I refigned the feals on Monday the 5th of this month, in order not to remain responsible for meafures, which I was no longer allowed to guide. Most gracious public marks of his majesty's approbation of my services followed my refignation: They are unmerited and unfolicited, and I shall ever be proud to have received them from the bett of fovereigns.

" I will now only add, my dear Sir, that I have explained these matters only for the honour of truth, not in any view to court return of confidence from any man, who with a credulity, as weak as it is injurious, has thought fit hastily to withdraw his good opinion from one who has ferved his country with fidelity and fuccess; and who justly reveres the upright and candid judgment of it; little follicitous about the censure of the capricious and the ungenerous: Accept my fincerest acknowledgments for all your kind friendship, and believe me ever, with truth and esteem.

My dear Sir,

Your faithful Friend, &c.

An Answer to the Right Hon. Person's Letter.

" Dear Sir,

"The city of London, as long as they have any memory, cannot forget, that you accepted the feals when this nation was in the most deplorable circumstances to which any country can be reduced: That our armies were beaten, our navy inactive, our trade exposed to the enemy, our credit, as if we expected to become bankrupts, sunk

An. 1761. monious. Every paragraph was exposed, on one fide, to the scrutiny of criticism, and the shafts of fatire; and on the other, extolled as the honest effusion of innocence and integrity. When the king, queen, and great officers of state, repaired to the city, to dine with the lord mayor at Guildhall, according to the custom observed by the kings of

> to the lowest pitch; that there was nothing to be found but despondency at home, and contempt abroad. The city must also for ever remember, that when you refigned the feals, our armies and navies were victorious, our trade fecure, and flourishing more than in a peace, our public credit restored, and people readier to lend than ministers to borrow: that there was nothing but exultation at home, confusion and despair among our enemies, amazement and veneration among all neutral nations: that the French were reduced fo low as to fue for a peace, which we, from humanity, were willing to grant; tho' their haughtiness was too great, and our fuccesses too many, for any terms to be agreed on. Remembering this, the city cannot but lament that you have quitted the helm. But if knaves have taught: fools to call your relignation (when you can no longer procure the fame fuccess, being prevented from purfuing the fame measures) a desertion of the public, and to look upon you, for accepting a reward, which can scarce bear that name, in the light of a penfioner; the city of London hope, they shall not be ranked by you among the one or the other. They are truly fenfible, that, though you cease to guide the helm, you have not deserted the veffel; and that, penfioner as you are, your inclination to promote the public good, is still only to be equalled by your ability: that you fincerely wish success to the new pilot, and will be ready, not only to warn him and the crew of rocks and quickfands, but to affift in bringing the ship through the ftorm into a fafe harbour.

" These, Sir, I am perfuaded, are the real fentiments of the city of London; I am fure you believe them to be fuch, of,

Dear Sir, yours, &c.

England, after their coronation, Mr. P-mingled An. 1761. with the procession, and in passing through the ftreets was faluted with fuch peals of acclamation, as feemed to derogate from the respect due to the most amiable sovereign that ever sate upon the British throne. The populace not only rent the air with their shouts, but expressed a desire of unyoking his horses, that they might draw, by force of arm, the chariot of their beloved minister. The fame demonstrations of particular veneration were industriously repeated in the sequel of the entertainment, and in the return of their majesties to St. James's; nor did the fourril herd of low plebeians refrain from exclamations of difguft against an unblemished nobleman, supposed to enjoy a distinguished share of his sovereign's considence and esteem. The more moderate part of the nation beheld these incidents with concern. They could not conceive that Mr. P- was at all influenced by fears for his personal safety in the step he had taken. They knew he might have differted in one particular from the majority of the council. without quitting his feat, and run no fort of rifque of being afterwards called to account for measures adopted in opposition to his opinion. They took it for granted his mind foared above all fuch childish apprehensions. They thought the abrupt and ungracious manner in which he refigned his employment, not only deprived his country of his fervice and influence at a time that peculiarly de. manded an exertion of his talents; but his feceffion favoured of difgust and refentment, and implying a disapprobation of the k-g's measures, acted

An. 1761. acted as a ferment upon the ill humour of the people. Such a commotion could not fail to clog the wheels of government, obstruct the public fervice, and might perhaps have some effect in alienating the affections of the subjects. They were of opinion that his accepting a pension and title did violence to the delicacy of his character, as a difinterested patriot, which character had been the subject of repeated encomium, and the theme of general admiration. They were forry he had not denied himself the pleasure of assisting at the procession to Guildhall, as his conduct on that occafion afforded an handle to his enemies, to charge him with having gone thither on purpose to browbeat his S-, to whose generosity he had been so much obliged; to follicit popularity, and exhibit himself as an idol of the crowd; and to receive the public incense of mobs hired to shout in his praise. That his friends should be driven to such a wretched expedient is scarce credible, considering how high his reputation stood in the metropolis at this period. About the latter end of October, it was refolved in the common-council, that the thanks of that court should be given to the Right Hon. William Pitt, for the many great and eminent fervices rendered this nation, during the time he fo ably filled the high and important office of one of his majefty's principal fecretaries of state; and to perpetuate the grateful fense of his merits, who, by the vigour of his mind, had not only roused the ancient spirit of this nation from the pusillanimous state to which it had been reduced; but, by his integrity and steadiness, uniting it at home, had had carried its reputation in arms and commerce An. 1761. to a height unknown before, by its trade accompanying its conquefts in every quarter of the globe. Therefore, the city of London, ever stedfast in their loyalty to their king, and attentive to the honour and prosperity of their country, could but lament the loss of fo able, so faithful a minister, at this critical conjuncture.

Whether this resolution was not in fact an arrogation of right to decide upon the merits of a tions on minister, the particulars of whose conduct they could not sufficiently distinguish; and implied a the comdisapprobation of their S-n and his council, because they had not implicitly surrendered their own faculties of perception and reflection, to the ideas of one man; nay more, because they had not complied with the violent measures he proposed, in diametrical opposition to their own sentiments and judgment; posterity will be candid enough to determine, when those clouds of prejudice which now darken the understanding, are distipated, and all the rancour of personal animosity is allayed and forgotten. The common-council of London ventured, at the same time, to dictate in another particular that depended intirely on the royal prerogative. They transmitted to the city's representatives in parliament, peremptory instructions, that they should use their utmost endeavours, not only to obtain the repeal, or an amendment of the late act for the relief of infolvent debtors, in respect of the inconveniencies arifing from the compulfive clause: but also oppose all attempts for giving up such places as might tend to leffen their prefent fecurity, or by restoring the naval power of France, render them subject to fresh hostilities from that natural enemy; particularly, that the fole and exclusive right of their acquifitions in North America, and the fisheries. be preserved to the subjects of Great Britain. Thus, at the same instant of time, they expressed their entire approbation of Mr. P-'s ministry, and strictly enjoined their representatives to hold fast those very exclusive privileges which he had agreed to relinquish.

Reflecthe conduct of . mon council.

An. 1761.

Conduct of his Britannic majefty with refpect to Spain.

In the midst of these heats and diffentions which inflamed and agitated the nation, the king's conduct was steady, resolute, sage, and circumspect, regulated by maxims which equally respected the dignity of his crown, and the dictates of political difcretion. Without deigning to interpole in the difputes that concerned the character of a late minifter, he took every measure which he thought conducive to the honour and the interest of the nation. He directed the earl of Briftol, his ambaffador at Madrid, to demand an explanation of the fecret treaty which had been lately ratified between the two monarchs of France and Spain; and to declare, that a refusal of this satisfaction would be confidered as a denunciation of hostilities: in the mean time he exerted himself in making preparations fuitable to that event.

An armato the West Indies.

A plan for the conquest of Martinique was already formed. In the month of October, rear-admiral Rodment fails ney failed from England with a squadron of ships, having under convoy a number of transports, with four battalions from Belleisle, to join at Barbadoes a strong body of forces from North America,

Guadalupe and the Leeward Islands, and proceed, in conjunction with the fleet already on that station, to the execution of the projected invasion. This was doubtless an object of great importance, and might have been easily accomplished in the first attempt under the conduct of general Hopson; but now the enterprize was encumbered by many difficulties. The island was strengthened with new fortifications, a strong body of troops, a numerous regulated militia, experienced officers, and plenty of provision, artillery, and ammunition.

On the third day of November the new parliament was opened at Westminster; and, as no ministerial influence had been used in electing the members of which it was composed, it undoubtedly deferved the appellation of a free parliament; a phænomenon which had not appeared in the meridian of Great Britain for the space of above forty years before this period. The king, being feated on the throne, commanded the attendance of the commons; to whom he fignified his pleafure, by the mouth of the lord high chancellor, that they should return to their house, and chuse a new fpeaker. Accordingly their unanimous choice fell upon Sir John Cust, baronet, a gentleman of extensive knowledge and distinguished probity, qualified in all respects to supply the room of Mr. Onflow, who had fo long and fo worthily discharged that important office. His majesty, repairing again to the house of peers on the fixth, approved of the speaker, and harangued the parliament in these words.

An. 1761.

" My Lords and Gentlemen, to all was discount

" At the opening of the first parliament, summoned and elected under my authority, I with pleasure take notice of an event, which has made me compleatly happy, and given universal joy to my loving subjects. My marriage with a princess, eminently diffinguished by every virtue, and amiable endowment, whilft it affords me all possible domeftic comfort, cannot but highly contribute to the happiness of my kingdoms; which has been, and always shall be, my first object in every action of my life. . doi: one see ban , vasdine , nothing " It has been my earnest wish that this first period of my reign might be marked with another felicity; the restoring of the blessings of peace to my people, and putting an end to the calamities of war, under which so great a part of Europe suffers. But tho' overtures were made to me, and my good brother and ally the king of Prussia, by the several belligerant powers, in order to a general pacification, for which purpose a congress was appointed; and propolitions were made to me by France, for a particular peace with that crown, which were followed by an actual negotiation; yet that congress hath not hitherto taken place, and the negotiation with France is entirely broken off.

"The fincerity of my disposition to effectuate this good work has been manifested in the progress of it; and I have the consolation to reflect, that the continuance of the war, and the farther effusion of Christian blood, to which it was the defire of my heart to put a stop, cannot with just ce be imputed to me. 7101 15

... Qur

Our military operations have been in no degree An. 1761; fuspended or delayed; and it has pleased God to grant us farther important successes, by the conquests of the islands of Belleisle and Dominica: and by the reduction of Pondicherry, which hath in a manner annihilated the French power in the East Indies. In other parts, where the enemy's numbers were greatly superior, their principal defigns and projects have been generally disappointed, by a conduct which does the highest honour to the distinguished capacity of my general prince Ferdinand of Brunswic, and by the valour of my troops. The magnanimity and ability of the king of Pruffia have eminently appeared in refifting fuch numerous armies, and furmounting fo great difficulties.

" In this lituation, I am glad to have an opportunity of receiving the truest information of the fense of my people, by a new choice of their reprefentatives. I am fully perfuaded you will agree with me in opinion, that the steady exertion of our most vigorous efforts, in every part where the enemy may still be attacked with advantage, is the only means that can be productive of such a peace, as may with reason be expected from our successes. It is therefore my fixed refolution, with your concurrence and support, to carry on the war, in the most effectual manner, for the interest and advantage of my kingdoms; and to maintain, to the utmost of my power, the good faith and honour of my crown, by adhering firmly to the engagements entered into with my allies. In this I will perfevere, until my enemies, moved by their own losses Y 2 and

r

An. 1761.

and distresses, and touched with the miseries of so many nations, shall yield to the equitable conditions of an honourable peace; in which case, as well as in the prosecution of the war, I do affure you, no consideration whatever shall make me depart from the true interests of these my kingdoms, and the honour and dignity of my crown.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

fupplies appears so clearly from what has already been mentioned. The proper estimates for the services of the ensuing year shall be laid before you; and I desire you to grant me such supplies, as may enable me to prosecute the war with vigour, and as your own welfare and security, in the present critical conjuncture, require, that we may happily put the last hand to this great work. Whatsoever you give shall be duly and faithfully applied.

"I dare say your affectionate regard for me and the queen makes you go before me in what I am next to mention; the making an adequate and honourable provision for her support, in case she should survive me. This is what not only her royal dignity, but her own merit calls for; and I earnestly recommend it to your consideration.

" My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I have such a considence in the zeal and good affections of this parliament, that I think it quite superfluous to use any exhortations to excite you to a right conduct. I will only add, that there never was a situation in which unanimity, firmness, and dispatch were more necessary for the safety, honour, and true interest of Great Britain."

An. 1761.

These expressions of confidence and esteem, which flowed from the heart of a patriot king, met with the most cordial returns of gratitude and af-The two houses unanimously resolved to address their sovereign in the warmest terms of zeal and attachment. The commons, having thanked him for his most gracious speech from the throne, presented their congratulations on the joyful and auspicious event of his nuptials, with a princess descended from an illustrious protestant line, distinguished by the most eminent graces and endowments, worthy to be the partner of a throne, by possessing every virtue by which it could be adorned. They expressed their deep sense of the affectionate regard he had manifested for his people, by consulting, on this important and interesting occasion, as on every other, the happiness of them and their posterity. They assured him, that with hearts full of gratitude for this fignal instance of his royal attention to the welfare of his subjects, and thoroughly fensible of the exalted merit of his illustrious confort, his faithful commons would not fail to make fuch honourable and ample provision as might enable her to support her royal dignity with proper luftre, in case she should survive his majesty; for the long continuance of whose life they should offer up their most ardent vows to Providence, without ceafing. They thanked his majefty for having expressed his concern for the profperity of his people, in wishing to restore them Y 3 the Address of the commons.

An. 1761.

the bleffings of peace. They declared their admiration of that humanity fo becoming the royal breast, which, amidst the successes of his own kingdoms, felt for the calamities of other nations. They professed themselves fully persuaded, that those beneficent dispositions which induced his majesty to propose a congress for a general pacification, and to engage in a negotiation with France for a particular peace, could not have failed of the defired effect, if the enemy, influenced by the same motives, had shewn the same good intentions, and would have complied with fuch conditions as were requifire for the accomplishment of that falutary work. They testified the most grateful acknowledgment of his majesty's vigilance and firmness, in not fuffering the hopes and expectations of peace to produce the least suspence or relaxation in the exertion of his arms; and congratulated his majesty on those happy successes, which, under the good providence of God, they ascribed to the wisdom and vigour of his majesty's measures: to these they owed the reduction of Dominica, the conquest of Belleisle, atchieved with so much reputation to the British arms, and the destruction of the enemy's power in the East Indies, by the acquisition of Pondicherry, their last remaining settlement of any strength in those countries. They observed, that the wife and able conduct of his ferene highness prince Ferdinand of Brunswic, whereby he had fuccessively defeated the projects of the enemy, and prevented their making that progress, which, from their superior numbers, they expected; together with that gracious approbation which his majesty jesty had been pleased to express of the valour of An. 1761. his troops; could not but give the highest satisfaction to his faithful commons! They faid, they faw with just admiration repeated proofs, in every campaign, of that unshaken resolution, and of those aftonishing efforts, which alone could have enabled his majesty's great ally, the king of Prussia, to refift the numerous forces of his enemies. They affured him, he might depend upon their intire concurrence and support, in the most effectual profecution of the war, for the interest and advantage of Great Britain; and in maintaining, to the utmost of their power, the good faith and honour of his majesty's crown, and the engagements entered into with his allies: and they declared themselves truly fenfible, that the constant care and attention of his majesty to pursue the most vigorous meafures, in every part, where any fuccessful impresfion could still be made upon the enemy, were the only means to attain that definable object, ian honourable and lafting peace. They acknowledged, with the deepest gratitude, that most endearing expression of his majesty's unbounded goodness and affection towards his native country, in the folema declaration which he had been pleased to make, that, as well in the profecution of the war as in the conclusion of the peace, no consideration whatever should-induce him to depart from the true interests of his kingdoms, and from the honour and dignity of his crown ... They gave him to understand. that his faithful commons would chearfully grant fuch supplies as the nature and extent of the several fervices thould be found to require, firmly relying knell.

An. 1761.

on his majesty's wisdom and justice, that they would be applied with the ftricteft œconomy, and in fuch a manner as might most effectually answer the great ends for which they should be granted. They expressed their earnest desires, that this first parliament, convened by his authority, might, by their conduct, give his majefty a happy proof of the zeal, the loyalty, and the affection of his people. They concluded with faying, that, fensible of the difficult crifis in which they were affembled, they were determined to concur, with the greatest firmness and unanimity, in whatever might contribute to the public welfare, might tend to defeat the views and expectations of their enemies, and conwince the world, that there were no difficulties which his majesty's wisdom and perseverance, with the affiftance of his parliament, could not furthree, in every part, where any forcefsful anuom

Remarks on the address.

knell,

knell, which had founded to long in the ears of An. 1761. Great Britain; they wished, and hoped, that, for the future, an amiable and fensible prince, who reigned in the hearts of his people, would exert that vigour of mind with which he was to liberally endowed by nature; that he would vindicate his own thoughts, speak his own fentiments, and deviate from the trite and hackneyed path of m---form, at all times ridiculous, and at no time neceffary, except when the throne is occupied by a prince who can neither think for himfelf; nor fpeak the language of his own kingdom.

Over and above this affectionate address to his majefty, a melfage was fent by the commons to congratulate the queen upon her royal nuptials; to express the unfeigned joy and fatisfaction which the house felt upon feeing the most ardent wishes of a faithful people, anxious not only for the present and future welfare of these kingdoms, but also for the immediate and domestic happiness of their excellent sovereign, to compleatly crowned by his majesty's wife and happy choice of the royal partner of his throne; and to affure her majefty of the most dutiful and zealous attachment of the commons.

As a great clamour had been raised against the Transaccompelling clause in the act, passed during the last fession, for the relief of insolvent debtors, this was ment. a circumstance which, previous to all other legislative measures, engaged the attention of the commons. The house was moved that the clause might be repealed; and leave being given to bring in a bill for that purpose, it soon acquired the sanction of the royal authority. That manifold frauds and abuses

tions in

An. 1761.

abuses were committed in consequence of this clause is not to be denied; but whether, under proper re-Arietions, it might not have been rendered a falutary regulation, in favour of industry and commerce, will admit of a dispute. Certain it is, great numbers of people, who were ruined in confequenes of this privilege claimed by their debtors, thought themselves cruelly treated, in being deprived of the fame benefit. The house of commons, in order to manifest the warmth of their attachment to their fovereign, proceeded to take into confideration that part of his speech relating to his royal confort on They refolved; that, in cale the should survive his majesty, she should enjoy a provision of one hundred thousands per annum during her life, together with the palace of Somerfet-house, tound the lodge and lands at Richmond old Parke that the king should be enabled to charge what annuity upon all or any part of fugh of theirevenues, as, by an act made in the last fession for the support of his majesty's houshold, were directed to be, during the king's life, confolidated with the aggregate fund, and frould be fubfifting after his majefty's demife; and to charge all of any part of the aggregate fund, as a collateral fedurity for making good the faid annuity. A bill formed on these resolutions passed both houses without opposition, and received the royal affent on the feeond day of December; when the speaker pronounced a speech, addressed to his majesty, replete with expressions of loyalty and affection.

Their next care was to examine estimates, and provide for the prosecution of the war. They voted

Francations in parliament.

valuri.

voted feventy thousand seamen for the service of Supplies the ensuing year: they maintained the land-forces to the number of fixty feven thousand fix hundred and seventy-six, over and above the militia of England, the two regiments of fencible men in North Britain, the provincial troops in North America, and fixty-feven thousand one hundred and seventyfeven German auxiliaries to support the war of Westphalia. In proportioning the supply, they likewise made good the foreign subsidies; as well as the deficiencies in the grants of the last session. Besides the standing revenue of the nation, consisting of the land-tax and malt-tax, and the other impolitions already laid for railing the interest of the public debt, it was found necessary to borrow twelve millions * on remote funds for the fervice of the year; and this step was taken accordingly.

* The fum of twelve millions was raised in the following manner. Every contributor, for every hundred pounds contributed, was intitled to an annuity, tranfferable at the bank of England, after the rate of four per centum per annum for nineteen years; and then to stand reduced to three per centum per annum, redeemable by parliament; and also to an annuity, transferable at the bank of England, of one pound per centum, to continue irredeemable for a certain term of ninety-eight years, and then to cease; the faid annuities of four pounds per centum, and one pound per centum, to be charged upon the finking fund, to commence from the fifth day of January next enfuing, and to be payable half-yearly on the fifth day of July, and the fifth day of January, in every year; and that the faid four per centum annuities should be added to, and made one joint stock of transferable four per centum annuities at the bank of England, with fuch other four per centum annuities, transferable at the An. 1761.

The funds affigned for paying the interest of this loan, confisted of a heavy additional tax upon win-bank of England, as should, by any act of this present fession of parliament, be charged upon and made payable out of the finking fund; and that every contributor should, for every fum of eighty pounds per centum, payed in to the cashiers of the bank of England, upon account of his share in the said annuities, after the rate of four per centum per annum, be intitled to one hundred pounds capital in the faid ftock of four pounds per centum annuities; and for every fum of twenty pounds paid in like manner, upon account of his share in the faid annuities of one pound per centum, should be intitled to an annuity of one pound, to continue for a certain term of ninety-eight years, in manner above mentioned. It was refolved, that every contributor should, on or before the twenty-third day of this instant December, make a deposit, with the cashiers of the bank of England, of fifteen pounds per centum, on such part of the fum or fums to be contributed by him, towards the faid fum of twelve millions. as should be payable, in refpect of his share in the faid four per centum annuities; and also a deposit of fifteen per centum, on such part of the sum or sums so to be contributed, as should be payable in respect of his share in the said one per centum annuities, as a security for his making the suture payments, respectively, on or before the times limited for that purpose.

It was also resolved, that every contributor, who should pay in the whole of his contribution, on account of his share in the said four per centum annuities, at any time on or before the eighteenth day of September next, or on account of his share in the faid one per centum annuities, on or before the thirteenth day of May next, should be allowed a discount, after the rate of three per centum per annum, on the fum fo compleating his contribution respectively, to be computed from the day of compleating fuch contribution to the twentieth day of October next, in respect of the fum payed on account of the faid four per centum annuities; and to the twentyfirst day of July next, in respect of the sum paid on ac. count of the one pound per cent. annuities.

dows,

dows, including all dwelling-houses which had An. 1761. eight lights or upwards; and of farther additional duties on spirituous liquors. These were made part of the sinking sund, on which the annuities were charged. Every window in a dwelling house containing eight or nine windows, and no more, was taxed at the yearly rate of one shilling: in a house lighted with ten or eleven windows, and no more, every light was taxed at six pence, over and above all other duties: where the number amounted to more than sourteen, each payed an additional duty of one shilling; and where they did not exceed nineteen, every window was taxed at three pence additional duty.

The

* The act relating to an additional duty on spirituous liquors was founded on the following resolutions: ---" That for every gallon of low wines, or spirits of the first extraction, made or drawn in Great Britain, for home consumption, from any fort of drink or wash brewed, or made from any fort of malt or corn, or from brewer's wash or tilts, or any mixture with fuch brewer's wash or tilts, there shall be granted, and paid to his majesty, one penny, over and above all other duties charged, or chargeable thereon, to be paid by the distillers or makers thereof .- That for every gallon of ftrong waters, or aqua vitæ, made for fale, for home confumption, of the materials aforesaid, there shall be granted, and paid to his majesty, three pence, over and above all other duties charged and chargeable thereon, to be paid by the distillers or makers thereof .-- That for every gallon of low wines, or spirits of the first extraction, made or drawn, for home confumption, from any foreign or imported materials, or any mixture therewith, there shall be granted, and paid to his majesty, three pence, over and above all other duties charged or chargeable thereon, to be paid by the distillers or makers thereof,—That for every An. 1761.

A categorical anfwer demanded of the court of Madrid. The supplies of the year were just provided, when the public attention was called off to an incident of national importance. The king of Great Britain had directed the earl of Bristol, his ambassador at Madrid, to demand of the Spanish ministry an explanation of the late treaty concluded between the kings of France and Spain; and particularly to require a categorical declaration, with respect to the part his Catholic majesty intended to act in the disputes between the courts of London and Versailles. His instructions imported, that these questions should be put with all the delicacy which the nature of such demands could admit, that Spain should have no cause to complain that gallon of low wines, or spirits of the first extraction, made or drawn, for home confumption, from cyder, or any fort or kind of British materials, except those before mentioned, or any mixture therewith, there shall be granted and paid to his majesty one penny three farthings, over and above all other duties charged or chargeable thereon, to be paid by the distillers or makers thereof.-That for every gallon of spirits made for sale, for home consumption, from cyder, or any fort or kind of British materials, except those before mentioned, there shall be granted and paid to his majesty two pence, over and above all other duties charged or chargeable thereon, to be paid by the distillers and makers thereof. --- That for every gallon of fingle brandy, fpirits, or aqua vitæ, imported into Great Britain from beyond the feas, not being the produce of the British colonies, there be paid by the importer, before landing, fix pence, over and above all other duties charged or chargeable thereon .-- That for every gallon of brandy, spirits, or aqua vitæ, above proof, commonly called donble brandy, imported into Great Britain from beyond the feas, not being the produce of the British colonies, there be paid by the importer, before landing, one shilling, over and above all other duties charged or chargeable thereon.

the was treated with want of decorum. The de- An 1761. mands were made accordingly, with all imaginable demonstrations of respect; but as the answers given appeared evalive and unfatisfactory, he became more peremptory in his remonstrances; and at length plainly declared, that if the court of Spain should refuse a positive explanation, whether the Catholic king intended to ally himself with France against England, he should interpret the refusal into an aggression and declaration of war, and, in confequence, be obliged to retire from the court of Madrid. The Spanish monarch had already taken his measures in concert with the court of Versailles, and waited only for an opportunity to provoke Great Britain into an immediate rupture. In anfwer therefore to this declaration, Mr. Wall, the Spanish minister, replied, that such a step could only be suggested by the spirit of haughtiness and of discord, which, for the misfortune of mankind, still reigned but too much in the British government; that it was in that very moment the war was declared, and the king's dignity violently attacked; and the earl might retire how and when he fliould think proper. Nothing could be more idle and frivolous than this pretence for taking umbrage. Had the English minister failed in point of punctilio, and made an abrupt demand. unauthorized by the law of nations, the court of Madrid might have refented his personal behaviour, and complained of it by their ambassador at London; but, even in that case, the affront would have been, by all the reasonable part of mankind, deemed too inconfiderate a cause for involving the and to de. was in that very mement two two nations in the horrors and mifery of war: yet An. 1761. even this plea was wanting. The earl of Briftol proceeded with delicacy and caution, and did not infift upon a categorical answer until every milder method had been tried without fuccess. The most extraordinary circumstance attending this rupture was the purport of a paper * delivered to the earl of Egremont, who had fucceeded Mr. Pitt as fecretary of state for the fouthern department, by the count de Fuentes, the Spanish ambassador at the court of It feems to have been calculated for fowing jealousies and fomenting divisions among the subjects of Great Britain, and may be termed bis Catholic Majesty's Declaration of War against the Person of William Pitt, late Secretary of State, and Minister to the King of Great Britain.

No

"The count de Fuentes, the Catholic king's ambaffador to his Britannic majesty, has just received a courier from his court, by whom he is informed, that my lord Briftol, his Britannic majefty's ambassador at the court of Madrid, has faid to his extellency Mr. Wall, minister of state, that he had orders to demand a positive and categorical answer to this question, viz. " If Spain thinks of allying herfelf with France. against England;" and to declare, at the same time, that he should take a refusal to his demand for an aggression and declaration of war; and that he should, in confequence, be obliged to retire from the court of Spain. The above minister of state anfwered him, that fuch a ftep could only be fuggeffed by the spirit of haughtiness and discord, which, for the misfortune of mankind, still reigns but too much in the British government: that it was in that very moment that ^{*} Translation of a Note delivered to the Earl of Egremont by the Count de Fuentes, Ambassador at the Court of London from the Court of Spain, December 25, 1761.

No measures were now to be kept with Spain.

The earl of Bristol was recalled: the count de

Fuentes

An. 1762.

the war was declared, and the king's dignity violently attacked, and that he might retire how and when he should think proper.

" The count de Fuentes is, in consequence, ordered to leave the court and the dominions of England; and to declare to the British king, to the English nation, and to the whole universe, that the horrors into which the Spanish and English nations are going to plunge themselves, must be attributed only to the pride, and to the unmeasurable ambition of him who has held the reins of the government, and who appears still to hold them, although by another hand: that if his Catholic majesty excused himself from answering on the treaty in question between his Catholic majefty and his most Christian majefty, which is believed to have been figned the fifteenth of August, and wherein, it is pretended, there are conditions relative to England, he had very good reasons: first, the king's dignity required him to manifest his just refentment of the little management, or, to speak more properly, of the infulting Numb. 38.

manner with which all the affairs of Spain have been treated during Mr. Pitt's administration, who, finding himself convinced of the justice, which supported the king in his pretensions, his ordinary and last answer was, That he would not relax in any thing till the Tower of London was taken sword in hand.

Befides, his majefty was much shocked to hear the haughty and imperious tone, with which the contents of the treaty were demanded of him: if the respect due to royal majesty had been regarded, explanations might have been had without any difficulty: the ministers of Spain might have faid frankly to those of England, what the count de Fuentes, by the king's express order, declares publicly, viz. That the faid treaty is only a convention between the family of Bourbon, wherein there is nothing which has the least relation to the present war: that there is in it an article for the mutual guaranty of the dominions of the two fovereigns; but it is specified therein, that that guaranty is not to be understood but of the dominions

War declared against Spain,

An. 1762. Fuentes retired from England. His Britannic majesty granted a commission, impowering the admiralty to iffue letters of marque, and commissions for privateers to act against the subjects of Spain.

War

minions which shall remain to France, after the present war shall be ended: that although his Catholic majefty might have had reason to think himself offended by the irregular manner in which the memorial was returned to M. de Buffy, minister of France, which he had presented for terminating the differences of Spain and England, at the fame time with the war between this last and France; he has, however, dissembled, and from an effeet of his love of peace, caused a memorial to be delivered to my lord Briftol, wherein it is evidently demonstrated, that the step of France, which put the minister Pitt into so bad humour, did not at all offend either the laws of neutrality, or the fincerity of the two fovereigns: that further, from a fresh proof of his pacific spirit, the king of Spain wrote to the king of France, his cousin, that if the union of interest in any manner retarded the peace with England, he confented to feparate himself from it, not to put any obstacle to so great a happiness: but it was soon feen that this was only a pretence on the part of the English minister; for that of France continuing his negotiation without making any mention of Spain, and proposing conditions very advantageous and honourable for England, the minister Pitt, to the great astonishment of the universe, rejected them with disdain, and shewed at the fame time his ill-will against Spain, to the scandal of the same British council: and unfortunately he has fucceeded but too far in his pernicious design.

This declaration made, the count de Fuentes desires his excellency my lord Egremont to present his most humble respects to his Britannic majefty, and to obtain for him paffports, and all other facilities, for him, his family, and all his retinue, to go out of the dominions of Great Britain without any trouble, and to go by the short pasfage of the fea, which feparates them from the continent."

Transla.

War was declared in form on the fourth day of January; and on the nineteenth the king communicated Translation of the Answer delivered to the Count de Fuentes by the Earl of Egremont, Dec. 21, 1761.

" The earl of Egremont, his Britannic majesty's secretary of state, having received from his excellency the count de Fuentes, ambassador of the Catholic king at the court of London, a paper, in which, besides the notification of his recal, and the demand of the necessary passports to go out of the king's dominions, he has thought proper to enter into what has just passed between the two courts, with a view to make that of London appear as the fource of all the misfortunes which may enfue from the rupture which has happened: in order that nobody may be misled by the declaration, which his excellency has been pleased to make to the king, to the English nation, and to the notwithwhole universe; standing the infinuation, as void of foundation as of decency, of the spirit of haughtiness and of discord, which, his excellency pretends, reigns in the British government, to the misfortune of mankind; and notwithstanding the irregularity and indecency of appealing to the English nation, as if it could be separated from its king, for whom the most determined fentiments of love, of duty, and of confidence, are engraved in the hearts of all his fubjects; the faid earl of Egremont, by his majesty's order, laving afide, in this answers all spirit of declamation and of harshness, avoiding every offensive word, which might hurt the dignity of fovereigns, without flooping to invectives against private perfons, will confine himself to facts with the most scrupulous exactness: and it is from this representation of facts, that he appeals to all Europe, and to the whole universe, for the purity of the king's intentions, and for the fincerity of the wishes his majesty has not ceased to make, as well as for the moderation he has always shewed, though in vain, for the maintenance of friendship and good understanding between the British and Spanish nations.

The king having received undoubted informations, that the court of Madrid had fecretly contracted engagedments with that of Verfailles, which the ministers of France

An. 1761. nicated it in a speech to both houses of parliament. He said he had so often assured them of his sincere dif-

laboured to represent, in all the courts of Europe, as offensive to Great Britain; and combining these appearances with the step, which the court of Spain had, a little time before, taken towards his majesty, in avowing its confent (though that avowal had been followed by apologies) to the memorial presented the 23d of July, by the fieur de Buffy, minister plenipotentiary of the most Christian king, to the king's fecretary of state; and his majesty having afterwards received intelligence, scarce admitting a doubt, of troops marching, and of military preparations making in all the ports of Spain, judged that his dignity, as well as his prudence, required him to order his ambaffador at the court of Madrid, by a dispatch, dated the 28th of October, to demand, in terms the most measured however, and the most amicable, a communication of the treaty recently concluded between the courts of Madrid and Versailles, or at least of the articles which might relate to the interests of Great Britain; and, in order to avoid every thing, which could be thought to imply the least flight of the dignity, or even the delicacy, of his Catholic majesty, the earl of Bristol was authorifed to content himself with affurances, in case the Catholic king offered to give any, that the faid engagements did not contain any thing that was contrary to the friendship which subfifted between the two crowns. or that was prejudicial to the interests of Great Britain. fuppofing that any difficulty was made of shewing the treaty. The king could not give a less equivocal proof of his dependance on the good faith of the Catholic king, than in shewing him an unbounded confidence in so important an affair, and which fo effentially interested his own dignity, the good of his kingdoms, and the happiness of his people.

How great, then, was the king's surprize, when, instead of receiving the just satisfaction, which he had a right to expect, he learnt from his ambassador, that, having addressed bimself to the minister of Spain for that purpose, he could only draw from him a resusal to give a satisfactory answer to his majesty's just requisitions, which he had accom-

disposition to put an end to the calamities of war, and to restore the public tranquillity on solid and last-

An. 1761.

accompanied with terms that breathed nothing but haughtiness, animosity, and menace; and which feemed fo strongly to verify the suspicions of the unamicable difposition of the court of Spain, that nothing less than his majesty's moderation, and his resolution taken to make all the efforts possible to avoid the misfortunes inseparable from a rupture, could determine him to make a last trial. by giving orders to his amhaffador to address himself to the minister of Spain, to defire him to inform him of the intentions of the court of Madrid towards that of Great Britain in this conjuncture, if they had taken engagements, or formed the defign to join the king's enemies in the present war, or to depart, in any manner, from the neutrality they had hitherto obferved; and to make that minister sensible, that, if they persisted in refusing all satisfaction on demands fo just, fo necessary, and so interesting, the king could not but confider fuch a refusal as the most authentick avowal, that Spain had taken her part, and that there only remained for his majesty to take the measures which his royal prudence should dictate for the honour and dignity of his crown, and for the prosperity and protection of his people; and to recal his ambassador.

Unhappily for the public tranquility, for the interest of the two nations, and for the good of mankind, this last step was as fruitless as the preceding ones; the Spanish minister, keeping no further measures, answered dryly, "That it was in that very moment that the war was declared, and the king's dignity attacked, and that the earl of Bristol might retire how, and when, he should think proper."

And in order to fet in its true light the declaration, " That, if the respect due to his Catholick majesty had been regarded, explanations might have been had without any difficulty; and that the ministers of Spain might have faid frankly, as Monf. de Fuentes, by the king's express order, declares publicly, that the faid treaty is only a convention between the family of Bourbon; wherein there is nothing which has the least relation to the present war;

An. 1762. ing foundations; that no impartial person, either at home or abroad, could suspect him of unnecessarily kindling a new war in Europe. He acquainted them, that, fince their recess, he had found himself > and that the guaranty, which is therein specified, is not to be understood but of the dominions which shall remain to France after the war :" it is declared, that, very far from thinking of being wanting to the respect, acknowledged to be due to crowned heads, the instructions given to the earl of Bristol have always been to make the requisitions, on the subject of the engagements between the courts of Madrid and Verfailles, with all the decency, and all the attention possible; and the demand of a categorical answer was not made till after repeated, and the most stinging refusals to give the least satisfaction, and at the last extremity; therefore, if the court of Spain ever had the defign to give this fo neceffary fatisfaction, they had not the least reason, that ought to have engaged them to defer it to the moment, when it could no longer be of use. But, fortunately, the terms, in which the declaration is conceived, spare us the regret of not having received it fooner; for it appears at arft fight, that the answer is not at all conformable to the demand: we wanted to be informed, if the court of Spain intended to join the French, our enemies, to make war on Great Britain, or to depart from their neutrality: whereas the answer concerns one treaty only, which is faid to be of the 15th of August, carefully avoiding to fay the least word that could explain, in any manner, the intentions of Spain towards Great Britain, or the further engagements they may have contracted in the present crisis.

After a deduction, as exact as faithful; of what has passed between the two courts, it is left to the impartial public to decide which of the two has always been inclined to peace, and which was determined on war.

As to the rest, the earl of Egremont has the honour to acquaint his excellency the count de Fuentes, by the king's order, that the necesfary paffports for him shall be expedited, and that they will not fail to procure him all possible facilities for his passage to the port which he shall think most convenient."

indil-

indispensibly obliged to declare war against Spain, An. 1762. for the causes specified in his public declaration. He observed, that his own conduct, since his accession to the throne, as well as that of the late king his grandsather, towards Spain, had been so full of good-will and friendship, so averse to the laying hold of several just grounds of complaint, which might have been alledged, and so attentive to the advantages of the Catholic king and his family, that it was matter of the greatest surprize to find that engagements had, in this conjuncture, been entered into between that crown and France; and a treaty * made to unite all the branches of the

" 1. Both kings will, for the future, look upon every power as an enemy, that becomes the enemy of either.

2. Their majesties reciprocally guaranty all their dominions, in whatever part of the world they be situated; but they expresly stipulate that this guaranty shall extend only to those dominions respectively of which the two crowns shall be in possession the moment they are at peace with all the world.

3. The two kings extend their guaranty to the king of the Two Sicilies, and the infant duke of Parma, on condition that these two princes guaranty the dominions of their most Christian and Ca-

4. Though this mutual inviolable guaranty is to be supported with all the forces of the two kings, their majesties have thought proper to fix the succours which are to be first furnished.

5, 6, 7. These articles determine the quality and quantity of these first succours, which the power required engages to surnish to the power requiring. These succours consist of ships and frigates of war, and of land-forces, both horse and foot. Their number is determined, and the posts and stations to which they are to repair.

^{*} Substance of the Treaty concluded between France and Spain on the 15th of August, 1761.

An. 1762. the house of Bourbon in the most ambitious and dangerous designs against the commerce and independency

8. The wars in which France shall be involved, in consequence of her engagements by the treaties of Westphalia, or other alliances with the princes and states of Germany and the North, are excepted from the cases in which Spain is bound to surnish succours to France, unless some maritime power take part in those wars, or that France be attacked by land in her own country.

9. The potentate requiring, may fend one or more commissaries, to see whether the potentate required hath assembled the stipulated succours within the limited time.

10, 11. The potentate required shall be at liberty to make only one representation on the use to be made of the fuccours furnished to the potentate requiring: this, however, is to be understood only in cases where an enterprize is to be carried into immediate execution; and not of ordinary cases, where the power that is to furnish the fuccours is obliged only to hold them in readiness in that part of his dominions which the power requiring shall appoint.

12, 13. The demand of fuccours shall be held a sufficient proof, on one hand, of the necessity of receiving them; and, on the other, of the obligation to give them. The furnishing of them shall not therefore be evaded under any pretext; and without entering into any discussion, the stipulated number of ships and land forces shall, three months after requisition, be considered as belonging to the potentate requiring.

14, 15. The charges of the faid ships and troops shall be defrayed by the power to which they are sent; and the power which sends them shall hold ready other ships to replace those which may be lost by accidents of the seas or of war; and also the necessary recruits and reparations of the land-forces.

16. The succours above stipulated shall be considered as the least that either of the two monarchs shall be at liberty to surnish to the other; but as it is their intention that a war declared against either, shall be regarded as personal by the other; they agree, that when they happen to be both engaged in war against the same enemy pendency of the rest of Europe, and particularly of An. 1762. these kingdoms. He expressed his reliance on the or enemies, they will wage it jointly with their whole forces; and that, in such cases, they will enter into a particular convention suited to circumstances, and settle as well the respective and reciprocal efforts to be made, as their political and military plans of operations, which shall be executed by common consent and with perfect agreement.

17, 18. The two powers reciprocally and formally engage not to liften to, nor to make, any propofals of peace to their common enemies, but by mutual confent; and, in time of peace, as well as in time of war, to confider the interests of the allied crown as their own; to compensate their respective losses and advantages, and to act as if the two monarchies formed only one and the same power.

19, 20. The king of Spain contracts for the king of the Two Sicilies, the engagements of this treaty, and promises to cause it to be ratified by that prince; provided that the proportion of the succours, to be furnished by his Sicilian majesty, shall be settled in proportion to his power. The three monarchs engage to support, on all occasions, the dignity and rights of their house, and those of all the princes descended from it.

21, 22. No other power but those of the august house of Bourbon shall be inserted, or admitted to accede to the present treaty. Their respective subjects and dominions shall participate in the connection and advantages settled between the sovereigns, and shall not do or undertake any thing contrary to the good understanding substiting between them.

fhall be abolished in favour of the subjects of their Catholic and Sicilian majesties, who shall enjoy in France the same privileges as the natives. The French shall likewise be treated in Spain, and the Two Sicilies, as the natural born subjects of these two monarchies.

24. The subjects of the three sovereigns shall enjoy, in their respective dominions in Europe, the same privileges and exemptions as the natives.

25. Notice shall be given to the powers, with whom

An. 1762. Divine bleffing on the justice of his cause, on the zealous and powerful affiftance of his faithful fubjects, and the concurrence of his allies, who must find themselves involved in the pernicious and extensive projects of his enemies. He left these confiderations with his parliament, full of the justest confidence, that the honour of his crown, and the interests of his kingdoms, were fafe in their hands.

> This speech being taken into consideration, each house apart presented an address, containing asfurances of constant support, conveyed in the most endearing expressions.

After all, if we may judge from the mutual declarations of war published by the two nations, they both feemed intent upon suppressing the real cause, and at a loss to find plausible pretences for proceeding to fuch extremities. The real motive which induced England to hazard a rupture, was a

the three contracting monarchs have already concluded, or shall hereafter conclude treaties of commerce, that the treatment of the French in Spain and the Two Sicilies, of the Spaniards in France and the Two Sicilies, and of the Sicilians in France and Spain, shall not be cited nor ferve as a precedent; it being the intention of their most Christian, Catholic, and Sicilian majesties, that no nation shall participate in the advantages of their respective subjects.

26. The contracting parties shall reciprocally disclose to each other their alliances and negotiations, especially when they have reference to their common interelts; and their ministers at all the courts of Europe shall live in the greatest harmony and mutual confidence.

27. This article contains only a stipulation concerning the ceremonial to be obferved between the ministers of France and Spain, with regard to precedency at foreign courts.

28. This contains a promife to ratify the treaty."

full persuasion of the Catholic king's partiality to An. 1762. the court of Versailles, and of his intention to assist France with treasure in the prosecution of her hostilities against Great Britain; for as to the pastum familiæ between the two branches of the house of Bourbon, it was no more than a defensive alliance for the mutual guaranty of their respective dominions, which any two nations have a right to contract, and a mutual concession of commercial priyileges, with which every power has an undoubted right to indulge its allies, without giving just cause of offence to any neighbouring nation.

As we have mentioned the fecond expedition General against Martinique, we shall conclude our narration with an account of the fuccess which attended Martithis enterprize. It may be necessary to inform the reader, that Martinique is the largest of all the Caribbee Islands, situated between the sourteenth and fifteenth degrees of north latitude, about the middle between Barbadoes and Guadalouge, to windward of Antigua and St. Christopher's. It extends twenty leagues in length, and may be about one hundred and thirty miles in circumference; indented by a great number of creeks and harbours; diversified with hill and dale, shaded with woods, watered by many streams; in climate fultry, in foil fertile, producing a very confiderable quantity of fugar, indigo, coffee, cotton, ginger, aloes, and pimento. Here the governor-general of all the French Islands in this part of the world resides; and here is established the sovereign council, whose jurisdiction extends over all the French Antilles, and even to the fettlements of that crown in the iflands descripnique.

An. 1762. islands of St. Domingo and Tortuga. In a word, Martinique is the most populous and flourishing of all the colonies which the French nation possess in America. Its towns and harbours are ftrongly fortified: the country itself is rendered extremely difficult of access by woods, passes, rivers, rocks, and ravines; defended by a body of regular troops, and reinforced by a disciplined militia, said to confift of ten thousand white natives, besides four times that number of negroes, whom they can arm in cases of emergency. The reduction of this island was an object of the greatest consequence to Great Britain, not only on account of its own intrinsic worth, and the detriment which the loss of it must occasion to the enemy, but likewise for the fecurity of the English islands, among which it is fituated, and of the British trading ships, which were terribly annoyed by the privateers of Martinique.

Account of the expedition to that ifland.

The armament from North America and England, under the command of major-general Monckton and rear-admiral Rodney, amounting to eighteen battalions, and as many ships of the line, befides frigates, bombs, and fire-ships, having rendezvoused at Barbadoes in the month of December, proceeded from thence on the fifth day of January; and on the eighth the fleet and transports anchored in St. Anne's Bay, in the eastern part of Martinique, after the ships of war had filenced some batteries which the enemy had erected on that part of the coast. In the course of this fervice, the Raisonable, a ship of the line, was, by the ignorance of the pilot, run upon a reef of rocks, rocks, from whence she could not be disengaged, An. 1762. though the men were faved, together with her stores and artillery. The general, however, judging this an improper place for a difembarkation, two brigades, commanded by the brigadiers Haviland and Grant, were detached under convoy to the bay of Petite-Anfe, where a battery was cannonaded and taken by the feamen and marines. These brigades were foon followed by the whole army, and the rest of the squadron; and other batteries being filenced, general Monckton and the forces landed without further opposition on the fixteenth, in the neighbourhood of the Cas des Navires. The brigadiers Haviland and Grant had made a descent in the other place, and marched to the ground oppofite to Pigeon-Island, which commands the harbour of Fort-Royal: but the roads being found impassable for artillery, Mr. Monckton altered his first design. The two brigades, however, with the light infantry under lieutenant-colonel Scot, while they remained on shore, were attacked in the night by a body of grenadiers, freebooters, negroes, and mulattoes, who had been fent over from Fort-Royal; but they met with fuch a warm reception as compelled them to retreat with precipitation, after having fustained fome loss.

The troops being landed at Cas des Navires, Surrender and reinforced with two battalions of marines, of Fortwhich were spared from the squadron, the general Royal. resolved to beliege the town of Fort-Royal; butin order to make his approaches, he found it necesfary to attack the heights of Garnier and Tortuefon, which the enemy had fortified, and feemed re-

An. 1762. folved to defend to the last extremity. The Eng. lish commander, having erected a battery to favour the passage of a ravine which separated him from those heights, made a disposition for the attack, which was put in execution on the twenty-fourth day of January. In the dawn of the morning, brigadier Grant, at the head of the grenadiers, fup. ported by lord Rollo's brigade, attacked the advanced posts of the enemy, under a brisk fire of the batteries; while brigadier Rufane with his brigade, reinforced by the marines, marched up on the right to attack the redoubts that were raifed along the shore; and the light infantry under colonel Scot, supported by the brigade of Walsh, advanced on the left of a plantation, in order, if possible, to turn the enemy. They succeeded in their attempt, while the grenadiers were engaged in driving the French from one post to another; and this motion contributed in a great measure to the success of the day. By nine in the morning they were in possesfion of the Morne Tortuefon, and all the redoubts and batteries with which it was fortified. The enemy retired in confusion to the town of Fort-Royal, and to the Morne Garnier, which, being more high and inaccessible than the other, was deemed impracticable. During the contest for the possession of Tortuefon, brigadier Haviland, at the head of his brigade, with two battalions of highlanders, and another corps of light infantry under major Leland, was ordered to pass the ravine a good way to the left, and turn a body of the enemy posted on the opposite heights, in hope of being able to divide their force; but the country was to difficult of access, that it was late before this passage was An. 1760 effected. In the mean time, the general, perceiving the enemy giving way on all fides, ordered colonel Scot's light infantry, with Walsh's brigade, and a division of the grenadiers, to advance on the left to a plantation, from whence they drove the enemy, and where they took possession of an advantageous post opposite to the Morne Garnier. They were supported on the right by Haviland's corps, when they passed the ravine; and the road between the two plantations, which they occupied, was covered by the marines. Next day the English began to erect batteries against the citadel of Fort-Royal; but were greatly annoyed from Morne Garnier. On the twenty-feventh, about four in the afternoon, the enemy made a furious attack. with the greatest part of their forces, on the posts occupied by the light infantry and brigadier Haviland; but were handled fo roughly, that they foon retired in disorder. Such was the ardour of the English troops, that they passed the ravine with the fugitives, seized their batteries, and took possession of the ground, being supported by the brigade of Walsh and the grenadiers under Grant, who marched up to their affistance when the attack began. Major Leland, with his light infantry, finding no refistance on the left, advanced to the redoubt which was abandoned; and the brigadiers Walsh, Grant, and Haviland, moved up in order to support him; fo that by nine at night the British troops were in possession of this very strong post, that commanded the citadel, against which their own artillery was turned in the morning. The French

An. 1762. French regular troops had fled into the town, and the militia dispersed in the country. The governor of the citadel, perceiving the English employed in erecting batteries on the different heights by which he was commanded, ordered the chamade to be beat, and furrendered the place by capitula. tion. On the fourth of February the gate of the citadel was delivered up to the English; and next morning the garrison, to the number of eight hundred, marched out with the honours of war. Immediately after the reduction of Fort-Royal, deputations were fent from different quarters of the island, desiring a capitulation: but the governorgeneral, Mr. de la Touche, retired with his forces to St. Pierre, which he proposed to defend with uncommon vigour. On the feventh, Pidgeon-Island, which was strongly fortified, and counted one of the best defences of the harbour, surrendered at the first summons, and obtained a capitulation similar to that of the citadel. It was agreed, that the troops of the French king should be transported to Rochfort in France; that the militia should lay down their arms, and remain prisoners of war until the fate of the island should be determined. These fignal fuccesses were obtained at the small expence of about four hundred men, including a few officers, killed and wounded in the different attacks; but the loss of the enemy was much more considerable. The most remarkable circumstance of this enterprize was the furprifing boldness and alacrity of the seamen, who, by force of arm, drew a number of heavy mortars and ships cannon up the steepest mountains to a considerable distance from from the sea, and across the enemy's line of fire, An. 1762, to which they exposed themselves with amazing indifference. Fourteen French privateers were found in the harbour of Port-Royal; and a much greater number, from other ports in the island, were delivered up to admiral Rodney, in consequence of the capitulation with the inhabitants, who, in all other respects, were very favourably treated.

bark for the reduction of St. Pierre, a very large of the and flourishing town, situated to leeward of Fort-Royal, two deputies arrived with proposals of capitulation for the whole island on the part of Mr. de la Touche, the governor general. On the fourteenth the terms were fettled, and the capitulation figned: on the fixteenth the English commander took possession of St. Pierre, and all the posts in that neighbourhood; while the governorgeneral, with Mr. Rouille, the lieutenant-governor, the staff-officers, and about three hundred and twenty grenadiers, were embarked in transports, to be conveyed to France. That fuch an important conquest should be atchieved almost without bloodfhed, was in a great measure owing to the favourable capitulation which the illand of Guadaloupe had obtained, and the good faith with which the articles of that capitulation had been observed by the conquerors. Indeed, the inhabitants of Martinique, who were indulged with nearly the fame gainers by their change of fovereign; inafmuch as, together with the enjoyment of their own reli-

Numb. 38.

Just when general Monckton was ready to em- Reduction ark for the reduction of St. Pierre, a very large of the gion,

An. 1762.

gion, laws, and property, they had now an opportunity of exporting their produce to advantage. and of being supplied with all necessaries from the dominions of Great Britain; whereas, before they fell under the English government, their commerce was almost intirely interrupted, and they were obliged to depend even for subfiftence upon the most precarious and hazardous methods of supply. By the reduction of Martinique, the islands of Antigua, St. Christopher's, and Nevis, together with the ships trading to these colonies, are perfectly secured against the depredations of the enemy; and Great Britain acquires an annual addition in commerce, at least, to the amount of one million sterling. While general Monckton was employed in regulating the capitulation of this island, commodore Swanton failed with a small squadron to the ifle of Grenade, which, with some others possessed by the French, depends upon Martinique, and in all probability would submit without oppofition.

我,你我,你我,你我,你我,你我,你我,你

The considerate part of mankind will easily conceive the numberless dangers, and difficulties, which a writer has to encounter and surmount in publishing the History of his own Times, exposed to the contradiction of living evidences, who have seen in different lights, and of consequence varied in their representation of many transactions in which they themselves have been principally concerned.

At the end of the third volume of our Continuation, we, in order to evince our own impartiality, and for no other confideration, inserted some remarks which commodore Moore had made on our account of the expedition to Martinique, and the conquest of Guadalupe.

Major-general Barrington, conceiving himself aggrieved by some of those remarks, has claimed the same privilege of making observations in his turn; and we, for the same reason, have complied with his demand.

For our own parts, we espouse neither side of the question. In a case of personal dispute between characters of such importance, all that an historian can do is to state it fairly before the tribunal of the public, and leave the reader to determine according to the force of his own conviction.

A a 2

Com-

Commodore Moore.

There were between four and five hundred highlanders; and the number of the whole army that failed from Barbadoes amounted to five thoufand eight hundred and twenty four men, as appears from the return. General Barrington.

Art. 1. There were only one hundred and fifty high-landers, that joined us at Barbadoes: the greatest part of the rest did not arrive till the day before we landed at Guadaloupe; and one company did not come till a squadron was sent to attack Fort Louis. They joined it off of that place, and landed with the marines. This was about three weeks after we came to Basse-terre.

It is not denied that the returns of the army, when we arrived at Barbadoes, amounted to five thousand eight hundred men: but it will appear also, by the returns, that no more were landed at Martinique than four thousand four hundred and fixty-eight men.

This diminution of numbers will not appear furprifing, when it is known that by our ftay at Barbadoes, which was abfolutely necessary, in order to wait for the hospital-ship, as well as for some others that were missing, with stores for the artillery, a very great number of men sickened, and became unsit for service, in the little time the sleet remained there.

Leeven zart salamen vid that a string all shall be been

The an intern ton of sign will end a fit north white beating after that occurrent

hat. in orgina to substant

General Barrington.

Mr. Hopfon was fo fenfible of his want of sufficient strength, that he applied to the commodore to have the marines put under his command, that they might be landed with the army: this Mr. Moore excused himself from granting, not knowing what enemy there might be in those seas, and, of consequence, supposing that he might have occasion for them himself.

Art. z. In regard to the commodore's offer of drawing the artillery, &c. Majorgeneral B—n can by no means speak to it, as he had, at the time that offer was sent, gone on board the Cambridge with a message from general Hopson: neither did he ever know that such an offer was made, till the day after the army reimbarked.

The message that he carried was, That if the commodore would land the artillery, stores, &c. at the savannah, the army would march next morning, and attack the fort in conjunction with the fleet.

This offer, which the general gave in writing, could not be complied with, for the reason alledged by the commodore; no more than

- Aag

an

The general having defired that the cannon might be landed at a favannah, where the boats must have been greatly exposed to the fire of the enemy, which would have rendered the fervice impracticable, according to the opinions of the pilots and captains, given in a council of war held for that purpole, Mr. Moore communicated these opinions to the general; but at the same time offered to land the cannon on the other fide of Point Negro, at a place equally near the road from the English army to Fort Royal, and even cause them to be drawn up by the feamen, without giving any trouble to the troops. general, instead of embracing this proposal, sent a second message to the commodore,

General Barrington.

defiring the troops might be reimbarked as foon as posfible; and this service Mr. Moore performed with reluctance.

longer flowers, was in this farmed an offer he took upon him. felf to make, that he would accept of any place to east. ward of the Bluff-point : neither did he ever hear that there was any other place proposed, except Point Negro. This is not meant as the fmallest impeachment, in regard to the conduct of the fleet, which did every thing possible upon that occasion: but, in order to justify the army for having reimbarked, it will be necessary to fay, that by the detours it must have made, in order to avoid the Morne Tortuefon, the diftance was upwards of four miles to the fort, without any practicable road for drawing the artillery, but what must have been made by themfelves, and that over a country which no European can have the least idea of. It would, besides, have been absolutely necessary to have established a chain of very ftrong posts, in order to have kept up its communication with the fleet, even if the commodore could have made good his offer of drawing the artillery, which feems more than doubtful, as it would have taken up two thousand five hundred feamen; yet how were provisions to be conveyed for an army that confifted (including women, fervants, vants, and blacks) of upwards of five thousand people, from the fleet to the camp, at four miles distance? This was not in the commodore's offer; but it was a very serious consideration for the army.

General Barrington.

The commodore, being well acquainted with the place, made a disposition for the attack, from which he could not be diverted by the opinion of the chief engineer, and other officers, who, after having reconnoitred the fortifications, declared they thought them impregnable to shipping—as appears from Mr. Moore's letter to the se-cretary of state.

Art. 3. It is by no means denied that the resolution of attacking the fort by fea was a very spirited one; or that it was not conducted with fuch bravery, as will always do honour to those gentlemen who had the honour to command those ships that lay before it: but the confequence by no means invalidated the opinion of the chief engineer, or the other officers, as it is certain that the fort was not, nor indeed could it, from its elevation, be much hurt by the flipping; neither did the enemy abandon it till they faw, by our manœuvre, that we were preparing to

A letter * from col. Cleveland to general B—n, upon this subject, will evince what has been said.

Art.

of Martinico, that I was made acquainted with the motives
A a 4 which

^{*} Copy of a Letter from Lieut. Col. Cleveland to Major-general Barrington.

[&]quot;SIR.

[&]quot; It was foon after the

After having observed that they laid him under great difficulty, by requesting that so late in the evening, which might have been granted so easily when it was first proposed,

General Barringtons

Art. 4. The reason why the troops, that were assembled under the stern of the Woolwich, did not land, as was proposed, under colonel Clavering, was, that the greatest which induced the general for taking fuch a step: I then understood the message from the general to commodore Moore was, that if he, the commodore, could make an attack with his fleet, or land the artillery, stores, and provisions, &c. nearer Fort Royal, the army, at all events, should march the next morning to invest the place; if not, boats to be fent on thore in the evening, for the troops to be taken on board. His answer was, that they could not be landed nearer, or at any other place, than where the troops landed: and he would undertake, with his failors, to land them there. But at a meeting of the general officers, the next morning, on board of his ship, he then faid that his message was, that he not only offered to land them at the place before mentioned, but likewise to transport them wherever the fervice might re quire. This much furprifed general Hopfon, and all the other general officers, who never took his answer in that sense. Being asked, what number of men he could spare from the fleet for that service, he mentioned four, or at most six hundred men, which was known to be greatly insufficient.

As for the chief engineer. giving his opinion against his majelty's ships of war attacking Fort Royal on the island of Guadaloupe, I am certain he continued in the fame fentiments after the attack was made, and the place abandoned; and I should not do justice to his character, were I of any other: for as the fort was on an eminence. it rendered their fire but of a very immaterial fervice towards reducing it, there being not a gun dismounted, nor much damage done to any capital work; nor did the enemy quit the fort, or cease firing, till the morning after the attack was made. They were fenfible of not being able to hold out fortyeight hours after the troops made good their landing. As it was commanded by heights, I think posed, he took his measures with fuch expedition and fuccefs, that in lefs than an hour the troops were rendezvoused under the Woolwich's ftern, when the landing was again postponed; though the evening was favourable, the Woolwich at that time very near the shore, and the Spy floop within her, almost close to the beach. In confequence of this delay, it was found extremely difficult to dispose of the men for that night, as it would have been impossible for them to find their respective transports in the dark: but this difficulty was furmounted by the commodore. who distributed them among the ships of war. vessels, set on fire by the enemy, being feen driving about, Mr. Moore, with the tranfports, kept to windward all night, in fuch a fituation as est part of the transports were drove to the leeward; which when general Hopson was made acquainted with, and that, in case of necessity, the colonel could not be properly supported, he countermanded them.

General Barrington.

As to the offer of landing the troops at twelve o'clock, it could not, with propriety, have been accepted of, as at that time the coast had never been reconnoitred; neither was it done till major-general B—n obtained leave from the general to do it next morning, when he pitched upon the place where the troops actually landed,

I think it would not have taken more time to have reduced it; and of consequence they must have weakened their own strength, by leaving a sufficient number of men for garrisoning the place, to be taken prisoners.

This, Sir, is what I can very well recollect and affirm, and am not a little furprised to read so different an account of the expedition in Smollett's History.

I have the honour to be,

With great truth,

Honourable Sir,

Your most obedient,

And much obliged,

Humble servant.

General Barrington.

to be able to chuse his anchorage next day. At the same time he directed the bomb-ketches to play upon the town, to amuse the enemy, and keep them at a distance, that the troops might land next morning without opposition.

The enemy threw up no intrenchments in the way to the Dos d'Ane: - the pass was hilly, but very accessible by means of a tolerable road, tho' stony and rugged. When the governor of Guadaloupe rejected the proposal sent with the flag of truce, the general would have tried the effect of a fecond message, which Mr. Moore warmly opposed, recommending it to him to fecond his blow while the enemy were in confernation, and offering to affift him with the mariners who were under his command. This attack he the more strongly recommended as he knew the nature of the climate, and forefaw the troops would foon be weakened by diftemper. Had his advice been taken, in all probability, the conquest of the island would have been finished in a few days; for all er most of the posts which the enemy possessed on the Capesterre side, were fortified after the landing of the English forces: and, whatever

Art. 5. Whoever has feen the Dos d'Ane, and is any. fort of judge of ground, must know that there was no necessity, or even use, for fortifying what nature had done every thing for: however, the enemy did not neglect even that. The whole of the road from the fea to the Dos d'Ane, which is near four miles, is fo narrow, that, in many places, not above three men could march in front, and most part of it very rocky and steep.

All the parts that flanked the road had been fortified, and artillery planted in them; fuch as Bifdary, Vaubelle, La Batterie Mutine, the Jesuits, the Hospital, and the house of Mr. La Garde, at which the enemy had established . their head-quarters. Above all this, was the grand camp, from which their cannon commanded the road. From thence there was another, which led to the Dos d'Ane, not above fix feet broad, a perpendicular precipice on each may

may have been faid of the bravery of the inhabitants, certain it is, that, as foon as they were attacked, they abandoned all their posts fucceffively, almost without refiftance; nor was there any reason to extol the courage and intrepidity of madam Ducharmey, who was faid to have defended her plantation at the head of her flaves and dependents.

When the marines had taken possession of Fort Louis, Mr. Moore, at the defire of general Hopfon, went on board the Panther, accompanied by colonel Clavering, to reconnoitre the coast, and fixed upon a landing-place near Arnonville, where the troops were actually difembarked.

flat of saw notted by he

General Barrington.

each fide of above fourfcore feet. This was flanked by hills, that could not be attacked from the plain below, and enfiladed from the front of the Dos d'Ane, which is not above five hundred yards in breadth, and both flanks were covered by inaccessible rocks and woods. Had even all these difficulties been surmounted, there were still more to encounter, if possible, of a stronger nature; I mean the redoubt, without which. our being masters of the Dos d'Ane would not have been of the least service, and which we must have abandoned, as it would have been next to impossible to have supplied that post with provisions.

Art, 6. When the commodore reconnoitred the coast of the Capesterre, it was some time before general Hopson's death; and at that time general Barrington had proposed to him to take fixteen hundred men, and carry the war on that fide of the island. This would have put the enemy between two fires, and there is the greatest probability to believe it would have been attended with fuccess; but this the general would never consent to, tho' often pressed to it by general Barrington. The army at that time amounted to three thou-

fand

· Branch Blifford Carlle Tile

General Barrington.

fand three hundred men, fit for fervice; but when the landing was made good, it confifted, after weakening greatly the garrison of Fort Louis, of between twelve and thirteen hundred only. It was near three weeks before this period that Mr. Moore advised the going to Houelbourg, which the general thought so impracticable, that he would not confent to it: it fell of course afterwards. when we were masters of the posts of Arnonville and Petitbourg.

Art. 7. The enemy had three pieces of eighteen pounders, besides a mortar of thirteen inches, which last they received from Martinique. During the siege, the battery was attacked at twelve o'clock at noon, and carried by captain Blomer of the sixty-first regiment.

The town was intirely demolished, except some few houses at the end next Fort Royal; and those that came down were only attracted by curiosity to see the ruins—the enemy had but two cannon, and these were spiked up by those that made a fally from the citadel—when the magazine blew up, Mr. Moore sent ships immediately to the assistance of the fort, which however had suftained very little damage.

referred to the line seems ago

and sychological bloom salvh

The commodore never dreamed they would attempt landing in this place, knowing that the enemy had driven stakes under water for the destruction of the boats. The inconveniences of landing here he had represented

Art. 8. Colonel Clavering landed at the river Mouftique, about two miles from Petitbourg, and there was not a stake drove in that place; tho' the bay of Petitbourg was full of them: this general Barrington was so well to the general, before he failed to Dominique.

The commodore employed his cruifers with fuch effect, that no provisions were landed at Mahaut fince the first attack of the island. A trader of St. Eustatia offered to supply the commodore with ten thousand barrels of beef, at an under-price, declaring, without scruple, that the British cruifers had effectually prevented him from disposing of it at any French market. Besides, the inhabitants of Guadalupe would have been chargeable with the greatest absurdity, had they collected magazines of provision in the defenceless town of Mahaut, fituated at fuch a distance from the centre of their posts, while their enemies had it in their power to cut off the communication: but, if they bad, it would have reflected no blame upon the commodore, who had done every thing in the power of ships to prevent it.

who we had a sew of the terror that

. . . .

General Barrington.

apprised of, that he never attempted to land there, which otherwise would have been a most advantageous spot.

Art. 9. The severest stroke the inhabitants felt, during the whole operations, was the destroying of the magazine of Bay-Mahaut. This rendered all their future defence useless, as by that means the redoubt, where were all the old people, women, and children, was cut off from being supplied.

Mr. Moore is very much mistaken, when he says that it was an improper place for a magazine: it was, as near as could be, in the center of the two islands, and as far removed as possible, confiftent with fafety and convenience, from the enemy. It was on that fide of the island which was most convenient to receive provisions from Sr. Eustatia; and, besides, there was so little water there, that the large ships could not come near it. Had they established their magazine on the sea-coast on the other side. which is the Capesterre, it would always have been fubject to have been destroyed by the landing of a few men. Where they had placed it, that was impracticable, as across the island it is above nine miles, which we must have marched to have destroyed it, leaving behind us Petitbourg and Arnonville, both ftrong posts, where the whole force of the enemy was at that time affembled; the one upon our right, and the other upon our left flank. This would have been madness. before we were in possession of these places, tho' afterwards a very easy task. It will appear, from a letter wrote by Mr. Des Hayes t. of what confequence that magazine was to the enemy, and that it was collected from St. Eustatia during the siege.

General Barrington.

The commodore sent this ther (to Marigalante) a strong Art. 10. It should seem that the troops had some small † Translation of the Letter from Messieurs Vidal and Des Hayes to Major-General Barrington.

"SIR.

"In answer to the letter you have done us the honour to write, relating to several circumstances concerning the siege of Guadaloupe, of which you require the true state, as we were eye-witnesses of what passed; Mr. Vidal having acted, during the siege, as a captain of the horse-militia, and at the beginning of the siege as aid-du-camp to the governor; and Mr. Des Hayes as captain in the infantry-militia.

We declare, Sir, that, with respect to the first article of your letter, what you alledge is very true, in regard to the difficulty of the road by the fea-fide, leading to the general quarters, as well as that of the Dos d'Ane: this last is fo steep and narrow, almost through its whole extent, which is about four thousand paces, or four Englifh miles, that three men can fcarce march a-breaft; and in many places it is fo incumbered with stones as to be absolutely impracticable. Moreover, it was the more diffi-

General Barrington:

detachment of ships, at whose arrival the inhabitants immediately capitulated. fmall share in the reduction of Marigalante, for the following reasons:

In

difficult to be forced, as entrenchments had been made, and posts fortified the whole length of the road; as at Bisdary, Vaubelle, la Batterie Mutine, the Jesuits, the Hospital, and, lastly, the guard at the general quarters; and above all this, the grand camp mounted with cannon, which commanded the road.

The inhabitants eagerly wished to be attacked in this place, hoping to fee your troops fink under the attempt. Their hopes were founded on the nature of the road, which would have produced new difficulties. They knew it was out of the reach of the cannon of the ships; and they were not afraid of being attacked in other places, being covered by the river of Gallion, being fecured on both fides by fuch a prodigious heighth, and defended by feveral posts, which it would have been impossible to país.

As to the second article, concerning the provisions brought to us from St. Euftatia to the Bay Mahaut, a little town situated in the bottom of the great Cul de

Sac, it is the only place from whence we received any during the fiege, if we except some boats that came loaden to Port Louis, Petit Canal, and Moule, three towns in Grande-terre, into which fome prizes were brought. We had our magazines at the Bay Mahaut, and until that town was reduced, our communication of provisions was not interrupted. They were at first conveyed to different plantations, particularly to that of Mr. Machicourt at Arnonville, and from thence to the reduit and general quarters: but your descent at Houelbourg, which was followed by the reduction of all the posts from the Bay Mahaut to Capesterre, and the seizure of all our provisions found in that town, and other places which were burned, from which places we could not possibly transport them in time to our reduits and general quarters; reduced the inhabitants to the absolute necessity of capitulating; being in want of provisions at the general quarters as well as in other posts, particularly at the reduit, to which all

General Barrington.

In the first place, the operation was planned by general

the women, children, and fick had retired; and, in fine, without any hope of receiving a fupply, having no longer any communication with the town of the Bay Mahaut, which was moreover the only pass for our militia from Guadaloupe to Grande-terre that remained, after the reduction of Fort Louis; which pass had never been interrupted by any cruisers, until you deprived us of it.

: LT. Offer pulvol

In regard to the third article of your letter, we can affure you, Sir, that when the marquis of Beauharnois, general of Martinique, arrived at Grande-terre, in the squadron of Mr. de Bompart, a few days after the capitulation of Guadaloupe, he difembarked about fix hundred regulars, and a confiderable number of men draughted from the companies in Martinique, together with the volunteers, of whom, as we are affured, there were fifteen hundred aboard the ships that composed the squadron, where was likewise store of ammunition fuitable to the fervice; but understanding that Guadaloupe had capitulated, they reimbarked. Those were very ill informed who faid there were fix hundred armed negroes: there were none but fervants who attended their mafters, and those not at all intended for fighting. We shall not fay any thing positive about the return of the fquadron. If we refer to the general opinion, and to perfons particularly acquainted with the situation of the islands, and with the seas by which they are furrounded. it cannot be denied but that if Guadaloupe had not been obliged to capitulate, by your last operations, in cutting off our provisions as well by fea as by land, that fquadron might have burned all the transports, before the British fquadron off Dominique could have come up, as the French was more than ten leagues to windward, and you had then but one frigate of forty guns with your transports; and that manœuvre of our fquadron would have infallibly obliged you to raise the siege, had it not been for the precaution you had previously taken.

With respect to the fourth article, concerning the Flibustiers, certain it is, there General Barrington.

ral Barrington, as appears by a letter wrote by him to the commodore, dated the 9th of May, 1759.

" As I intend attacking "Marigalante in a few days,

" I believe I must beg a ship,

" or rather two, in order to favour the descent of

" the troops."

In the second, by another letter of the 17th of May, wrote to him also, it appears what orders the general had given to governor Crump:

"I have fent with B. "Crump feven hundred re" gulars, five hundred irre-

" gulars, three pieces of can-

" non, and a hawitzer. I have likewise given him were about five hundred in the island. Near two hundred of these people had disembarked at Bay Mahaut, during the fiege. Part of thein were employed at the batteries: the rest were formed into two companies. The first of these, consisting of about two hundred and fifty, was commanded by Grand Joseph, who was killed at their head when your grenadiers advanced to the attack of the Batterie la Mutine: NUMB. XXXIX, the other, of fifty, was commanded by the fieur Roux.

This, Sir, is the undifguised truth of all you defired us to explain.

We have the honour to be, with the most profound respect,

Sir.

Your most humble, and most obedient servants.

London, Aug. 1761."

er orders,

of sing was an labiful mis by a letter winded, he him to the weighten bereight to the av to an iteratual mayid by the ensonal of Africans. Africa est dans Establis General Barrington.

- " orders, as foon as he lands,
- " to fummon the island;
- " and, in case they are ob-
- other terms but being pri-
- " foners of war."

I might add a third, which is, that the island had been fummoned about fix weeks before by the shipping; but the answer given by the governor was very far from being satisfactory.

The troops which were landed did not exceed fix hundred blacks and whites, and these in a wretched condition; fo that, if they had itayed, they might all have been taken prisoners, as Mr. Moore would have gone up and landed his marines on the back of Mr. Beauharnois, who would have found himfelf between two fires. As for Buccaneers, they existed no where but in imagination. The date of those adventurers expired above fifty years before this period.

1,5 0000

ettebro is

Art. 11. It appears, from a letter wrote by Mr. Des Hayes to general Barrington, that the fuccours landed by Mr. de Beauharnois confifted of fix hundred regular troops, and a great number of the militia draughted from the companies at Martinique, befides voluntiers, of which there were on board the fleet near fifteen hundred. This does not feem like the account given of them by Mr. Moore; neither is it to be imagined that the general of Martinique would truft himfelf with fuch wretches as they are represented, whose condition could not have been rendered fo miferable from the length of their voyage.

It appears farther, that no negroes were difembarked as fighting men, but as fervants to attend their masters. Had the marines been landed in their rear, it might have certainly been of fervice; and tho' it is not doubted but that the commodore would have done every thing in his power to have affifted the army, yet as Mr. de Bompart was then cruifing off Grande-terre with his whole fleet, it is not to be supposed he could have then done it, as the general had before lent him three hundred men to reinforce his fquadron, upon the news of Bompart's arrival: at the fame time he offered to embark himself and his little army on board the fleet; an offer which Mr. M- refused; but he accepted of the three hundred men.

General Barrington.

N. B. The word Flibustiers does not mean Buccaneers, but Privateers-people; four hundred of which came from Martinique to Guadaloupe, under the command of Mr. de Folville, lieutenant de Roy at Martinique.

There is an article in the capitulation, by which ships were provided to carry them back to that island.

These islands (viz. the Santos and Deseada) were not summoned 'till a considerable time Art. 12. It was by no means necessary for general Barrington to summon the Bb 2 small time after general Bhad failed for England.

General Barrington.

fmall islands of Los Santos. Deseada, and Petite-terre, as they were all comprised in the capitulation of Guadaloupe. The deputies of thefe were all at his head-quarters for fome days intreating a feparate capitulation, which he never would grant them: however, they were perfectly fatisfied before they left him: if they had not, it would not have been of the least confe-The general fent quence. captain Buchanan to take away their arms, at the fame time that he took away those of the different parishes of Guadaloupe and Grandeterre; but the weather was fo bad, that he could not reach them within the time to which he was limited; for he was not fent till about the tenth of June, and the army was to embark the twenty. fourth for England.

INDEX.

A.

ABERCORN (Hamilton) earl of, entertains queen Charlotte, iv. 230

Abercrombie, general, appointed to succeed general Shirley, i. 342. Situation of affairs in North America at his arrival at Albany, 353. He succeeds to the chief command in America, 379

Achilles, French man of war, taken, iv. 238

Admiralty, courts of, for the trial of offences committed at fea, to be held twice a year, iii. 29

Adolphus-Frederick succeeds to the crown of Sweden, i. 116. Conspiracy discovered to make him absolute, 377. He threatens to abdicate, ibid. His forces invade Prussian Pomerania, ii. 144, 161. His general's declaration, 161. Some of his territories seized by the Prussians, 164. His answer to the landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, ib. Advantages gained by his troops in Pomerania, iv. 58. Their further operations there, 91. The French king's memorial to him, 265. His sleet joins the Russian before Colberg, 283. Operations of his troops in Pomerania, ib. 284

African trade, measures taken with regard to, i. 26, 49, 73.

ii. 225

Aiguillon, duke of, marches against general Bligh, ii. 257. His politeness to the English officers, 264. Assembles a body of forces for the invasion of Britain, iii. 111.

Aix, isle of, taken, ii. 11. Its fortifications demolished,

iv. 251

Aix-la-Chapelle, reflections on the peace of, i. 1, 13, 57. iii. 274. Rejoicings for, i. 44

Albany, in New York, described, i. 217

Albermarle,

Albemarle (Keppel) earl of, reclaims fome English traders taken by the French in America, i. 175. He is amused at Paris, 182, 228. His death, 243

Alcide, French-man of war, taken, i. 249

Algerines take and plunder an English packet-boat, i. 54. Allied-army, affembles under the duke of Cumberland, ii. 98. Skirmishes with the French, 99, 100. Passes the Weser, 100. Worsted at Hastenbeck by the French, 104. Retreats to Hoya, 107. And thence to Stade, 110. Difperfed by the convention of Closter-Seven, 111. Re-assembled under prince Ferdinand, 178. Obtains some advantages over the French, whom it obliges to evacuate part of the Hanoverian dominions, ib. But is checked at Zell, 179. Skirmishes with the French, 319. Harrasses the French in their retreat, 323, 324. Passes the Rhine, and obtains divers advantages over the French, 325. Gains the battle of Crevelt, 327. Defeated at Sangerhausen, 330. Worsts M. de Chevert at Meer, 333. Repasses the Rhine, 334. Cantoned in the landgraviate of Heffe. Cassel, the bishoprics of Munster, Paderborn, and Hildesheim, 337. Skirmishes between them and the enemy, iii. 224. Worsted at Bergen, 225. Harrassed in retreating, 227. Defeats the French at Minden, 231, and Coveldt, 235. Complaints of its violating the neutrality of the Dutch territories, 271. Skirmishes between it and the French, iv. 32, 36, 38. Defeated at Corbach, 40. Victorious at Exdorf, 41. At Warbourg, 43. Skirmishes with the French, 47, 48, 49, 267, 269, 271, 272. Defeats the French at Kirch-Denckern, 272. Other skirmishes with the French, 276, 279. Offers battle to marechal Broglio, 278. Goes into winter quarters, 280

America, troops in, subjected to the mutiny-act, i. 242. Maritime laws of England extended to it, 300, and the power of inlisting indented servants, ib. Scheme for making falt in it, ii. 228. See West-Indies

(North) general view of the British colonies in it, i. 212. Transactions in it, i. 40, 173, 175, 226, 248, 252, 353. ii. 34, 279. iii. 161, 398. iv. 1, 247

American contract examined, i. 464

Amberst, general, reduces Cape Breton, ii. 279. Returns to New-England, and sets out for Albany, 290. Receives the thanks of the House of Commons, iii. 70. Takes possession of Ticonderoga and Crown-Point, 174. Embarks on lake Champlain, 175. His operations there, and after Oswego, 420. Sails down the river St. Laurence, and reduces the French fort at Isle Royale, 423. He takes Montreal, 425

Ancaster, duches of, appointed a lady of the bed-chamber, iv. 228

Andrews, captain, his engagement with part of a French fquadron, i. 248

Angel, captain, his success, iii. 102

Angria, resolutions taken against him, i. 371. His fort of Geriah taken, and sleet destroyed, 373

Anhalt-Cothen, prince of, taken prisoner by the allies, iv. 42

Anbalt-Dessau, Maurice, prince of, collects a Prussian army, ii. 64. Which he conducts into Bohemia, 73. His advanced posts at Pirna attacked by the Austrians, 131. He is sent to secure Berlin, 144. Conducts the third division of the Prussians into Moravia, 359. Is wounded and taken at Hochkirchen, 356. His conduct at Minden, iii. 232

Anjengo, in the East-Indies, described, i. 201 Annapolis, in Maryland, described, i. 221 and are reduced by major Laurence, 180

Annuities, some of, consolidated, i. 124, iii. 344

Anson, lord, visits Portsmouth, i. 251. Appointed first lord of the admiralty, ii. 8. Steers with Sir Edward Hawke to the bay of Biscay 246. Several French vessels driven ashore by some of his cruisers, 266. He is continued at the head of the admiralty, iv. 222. Sails with a squadron to escorte queen Charlotte, 228

Antigallican privateer takes a French East-India ship, ii. 31.

Petition of the owners of, 224

Antrobus, captain, his success, iii. 102

Apraxin, general, takes Memel, ii. 118. Engages marechal Lehwald at Norkitten, 136. Makes a hafty retreat from Prussia, 137. Disgraced and tried, 307

Aquilon, French man of war, destroyed, ii. 181

Aram, Eugene, an account of, iii. 82

Arc-en-ciel, French man of war, taken, i. 362

Arcot, dispute about the government of the province of, i. 205. The whole reduced by colonel Coote, iii.

Aremberg,

Aremberg, duke of, takes Gabel, ii. 124. Worsted by prince Henry of Prussia near Pretsch, iii. 258

Aretbusa, French frigate, taken, iii. 102

Argyle, (Campbell) duke of, his remarks on the bill for the British fishery, i. 72. His death, iv. 224

, general John Campbell, duke of, iv. 224

Armiger, brigadier, attends general Hopson to the West-Indies, iii. 130

Artifts, eminent, an account of, iv. 123

Arts, &c. societies instituted for the encouragement of, ii.

Albley, captain, killed, i. 267

Affiento with Spain, debates on, i. 89, 91

Aftronomers, fent to the East-Indies, iv. 15

Afylum for orphans, instituted, ii. 412

Attougaica, earl of, put to death for a conspiracy against the king of Portugal, ii. 386, iii. 277

Aubry, M. defeated and taken by Sir W. Johnson at Niagara, iii. 178

Augustus III. king of Poland, elector of Saxony, borrows money from the elector of Hanover, i. 83. Engages his vote for electing the archduke king of the Romans, in confideration of a subsidy from England, 115. A new fubfidy granted him by England on account of Hanover, 235. Declines engaging in the confederacy with Russia, Hungary, &c. 380. His electoral dominions invaded by the king of Prussia, 384. And himself blocked up with his troops at Pirna, 387. His queen insulted, and cabinet rifled, 388. He escapes to Konigsstein, 392. His letter to his general concerning his forces, 393. He retires to Poland, 394. His troops are obliged to furrender to the king of Prussia, who compels them to incorporate with his army, 394. His memorial at the Hague, ib. The Prussian answer to it, 399. The articles on which his troops were obliged to furrender, ii. 60. Death and character of his queen, 180. His electorate laid under contribution, and ordered to furnish recruits for the Prusfians, 308. The suburbs of his capital of Dresden burnt by the Prussians, 361. His ministers memorial to the diet of the empire on that outrage, 364. His Saxon subjects grievously oppressed by the king of Prussia, 369, 371. His fon, prince Charles, elected duke of Courland, 376. Justifying proofs published against him by the king of Prushia, 435. Answers to them, 468. Operations of the the Imperialists and Prussians in his electorate, iii. 256. His capital there much hurt by the king of Prussia in an attempt upon it, iv. 66. Complaint against his troops behaviour at Berlin, 79. With the answer thereto, 89. His remonstrance on the Prussian behaviour at the siege of Drefden, 97

Austrians, hostilities commenced between them and the Prusfians, i. 388. Whom they fight at Lowoschutz, 390. Skirmishes between them and the Prussians on the frontiers of Bohemia, ii. 66. Routed at Reichenberg, 74. And near Prague, 76. Their brave defence of Prague, 84. They defeat the Prussians at Kolin, 89. They take Gabel, 124. Destroy Zittau, with many circumstances of cruelty, 125. Skirmish with the Prussians, 128, 131. Decline an engagement with the king of Prussia, 139. They attack the Prussians at Goerlitz, 141. Take Lignitz, 144. Lay Berlin under contribution, ib. They take Schweidnitz, 152. Defeat the prince of Bevern near Breslau, 153. They are routed at Lissa, 157. They force the Prussians to raise the siege of Olmutz, and to retire into Bohemia, 341. Harrass them in their march, 343, 346. Joined by the Imperial army, 353. Defeat the king of Prussia at Hochkirchen, 355. Skirmishes between them and the allies, iii. 224, 243. And the Prusfians, 250. A detachment of them fent to re-inforce the Ruffians, ib. And contribute much to the victory at Cunersdorf, 253. A body of them worsted at Corbitz and Hoyerswerda, 257. And at Pretsch, 258. They furround and take a Pruffian army at Meixen, 259. And another under general Diercke, 260. Advantages gained by them against the Prussians in Saxony, iv. 59. They defeat an army of Pruffians at Landshut, and reduce Glatz, 62. They are worsted at Lignitz, 70. And under general Beck, 73. They and the Ruffians poffess themselves of Berlin, 78. Account of their enormities there, 79. With their answer thereto, 89. They take Torgau, and Leipfick, 91. Are worsted at Torgau, 92. Skirmishes between them and the Prussians, 282. They surprize Schweidnitz, 286. Make an attempt upon the army of prince Henry, 228

Authors, eminent, an account of, iv. 123

Aveiro, duke of, put to death for a conspiracy against the king of Portugal, ii. 386, iii. 277

BAKER, Richard, his contract for the forces in North America, approved of by the commons, i. 464

Balafore, in the East-Indies, described, i. 204

Balfour, captain, his bravery at Louisbourg, ii. 283

Banbury (Knollis) earl of, gallantry of his sons, iii. 396

Bankrupts. See Debtors

Banks, Mr. prepares a bill for the punishment of governors of plantations, i. 456

Barbary Corfairs, their insolence, i. 53

Barker, captain, sent to burn two ships off Toulon, iii. 105.

Barlow, colonel, affists in taking Guadalupe, iii. 150.

Barnard, Mr. remarkable transaction between the duke of Marlborough and him, ii. 415

Barnes, William, his great age, iii. 96

Barrington, lord, appointed master of the wardrobe, i. 193. He resigns, and is made secretary at war, 293. Presents estimates for raising new levies, 295. His letters to general Fowke, 316, 324, 350

His operations at Guadalupe, 136, 144, 146, 147, 150, 151. He also reduces the islands of Deseada, Santos, and Marigalante, 158. Returns to England, 160. His remarks upon commodore Moore's account of the descent upon Martinique, iv. 371

of war, iii. 100

Barton, captain, shipwrecked on the coast of Morocco, ii. 297

Bateman, lord, brings a message to the commons relating to extraordinary expences of the war, i. 426

Bath (Pulteney) earl of, his speech on the mutiny bill, i. 23. He opposes the bill for annexing the forfeited estates in Scotland to the crown, 123

Battles and skirmishes. Aller, ii. 178. Anclam, iv. 59. Arani, i. 208. Asch, iii. 244. Augerbach, 240. Bergen, 255. Breslau, ii. 153, iv. 285. Butzbach, iv. 38, 50. Calcutta, ii. 471. Campen, iv. 53. Cappenheigen, 279. Chandanagore, iii. 213. Chignecto, i. 181. Chinchura, iii. 213. Cohlin, 74. Corbach, iv. 40. Corbitz, iii. 57. Coveldt, Covelt, iii. 235. Crevelt, ii. 327. Cunersdorf, iii. 251. Cutwa, ii. 52. Daffel, iv. 276. Dillemburg, 33. Domstadt, ii. 343. Duderstadt, iv. 267. Dymel, 271. Ebstorf. ii. 178. Eglen, 143. Eimbeck, iv. 47. Elverick, 54. Erfurth, ii. 144. Ersdorff, iv. 33. Exdorff, 41. Eybach 33. Eysenach, 269. Fehrbellen, ii. 374. Fellinghausen, iv. 272. Fort du Quesne i. 227, 258, ii. 293. Freydberg, iv. 60. Fulda, iii. 240. Gabel, ii. 124. Geiffa, iv. 36. Gentzungen, 269. Goerlitz, ii. 141. Gotliebe, 132. Griefenberg, iii. 244. Gruenewiese, ii. 361. Guya, iv. 245. Hastenbach, ii. 104. Heligenstadt, iv. 267. Herborn, 33. Heydenmunden, 57. Hirschfeldt, ii. 66. Hochkirchen, 355. Hoff, iii. 245. Hosenfeldt, iv. 39. Hoya, ii. 323. Hoyerswerda, iii. 257. Kaurzim, ii. 89. Kay, iii. 269. Kirch-Dencker, iv. 272. Kleinlinner, iii. 241, iv. 32. Kolin, ii. 89. Koveripauk, i. 208. Lake George, 265. Landshut, iv. 60. Lang-Reichenbach, 92. Lawenthagen, 50. Lignitz, 70. Liffa, ii. 157. Lowoschutz, i. 390. Lutzen, iv. 39. Near Lyal Henning, ii. 293. Maffagualt, i. 253. Maxen, iii. 259. Meer, ii. 333. Meiffen, iii. 260, iv. 282. Minden, 231. Molrichstadt, iv. 225. Montmorenci, iii. 190. Mulhausen, iv. 269. Munden, 50. Musulipatam, 205. Neustadt, 60. Niagara, iii. 178. Nordheim, iv. 47. Norkitten, ii. 136. Norten, iv. 50. Onondago, i. 355. In Paraguay, iv. 22. Passberg, iii. 244. Paffevalik, iv. 92. Paffendorff, 70. Pirna, ii. 131. Plaune, iv. 282. Prague, ii. 76. Quebec, iii. 188, 415. Reichenberg, il. 74. Rosbach, 147. Rhynberg, iv. 52. Saalfieldt, 212. Sababourg, 47. Salme, 271. Sameaveram, i. 209. Sangarhausen, ii. 30. Schaken, iv. 56. Schermbeck, 55. Schwartz, 282. Schweidnitz, 73. Soheite, 50. St. Cas, ii. 259. St. Mary's, iii. 150. Stangerode, iv. 270. Steinau, 60. Strehla, 74. Strieffen, ii. 361. Surat, iii. 205. Syrinham, i. 210. Tecklenburgh, ii. 99. Ticonderoga, 38, 287. Torgau, iv. 60, 92. Vacha, 36. Wandewash, iii. 218. Warbourg, iv. 43. Warfunger, iii. 225. Zlelbach, iv. 39. Zierenberg, 48. Ziethen, 59. Zorndorf, ii. 347. Zullichau, iii. 247

Battoes, described, i. 270

f

Bavaria, Maximilian, elector of, accepts of a subsidy from Britain, i. 82. Debates thereon, 90. Gets a new gratification on account of Hanover, 235. His troops join the French army, ii. 59

Beck, general, surprises and takes a battalion of Prussian grenadiers, iii. 243. He defeats another detachment, iv. 60.

Is worsted by the king of Prussia, 73

Reckford, William, supports the interest of Jamaica, i. 150.
Opposes extending the military laws to the East India company's settlements, 189. Letter said to be wrote to him, iv. 330. With the answer, 331

Beckwith, colonel, diftinguishes himself at Warbourg, iv.

Bedford (Ruffel) duke of, opposes the bill for annexing the forfeited estates in Scotland to the crown, i. 123. His message, as lord lieutenant, to the Irish parliament, concerning a dreaded invasion from France, lii. 121. Some incidents relative to his government there, 125.

Bedfordsbire, riots in, ii. 33

Beef, allowed to be imported from Ireland into England, ii. 215, iii. 24, 313, iv. 200

Beer, reflections on the price of, iii. 312. An additional duty on, iv. 195. Clamours against that tax, 215
Bell, Mr. his gallant defence of Cape-coast castle, ii. 236.

, enfign, treacherously wounded by the Indians, iii,

____, mis, her remarkable case, iv. 16

Bellamy, rev. Mr. and his fon, perish at Calcutta, i. 368. Belleisle, the expedition to, and reduction of, iv. 251 nels in Germany, ii. 325. His only fon killed at Crevelt, 329. His letters to marechal Contades, iii. 236

, marechal de, French frigate, taken, iii. 394

Belliqueux, French man of war, taken, ii. 266

Bellona, French frigate, taken, iii. 98 Bencouli, taken by the French, iv. 246

Bender-Abaffi, taken by the French, iv. 243

Bentley, Sir John, fignalizes himself in the action with M. de la Clue, iii. 108. He is knighted, 109

Berkeley, French frigate, taken, iii. 103

Berlin, laid under contribution by the Austrians, ii. 144. And by them and the Russians, iv. 78

Bernard, governor, his conferences with the American In-

Bestuckef, chancellor of Russia, disgraced, ii. 344

Bevern, the prince of, harrasses the Austrians on the frontiers of Bohemia, ii. 66. Defeats count Konigseg at Reichenberg. 74. His bravery at the battle near Prague, 79. Commands the Prussian camp in the king's absence, 140.

140. Part of his troops attacked, 141. He retreats to Breslau, 142. Where he is deseated and taken, 153. Assists in driving the Swedes out of the Prussian territories, 374

Bienfaisant, French men of war, taken, ii. 283

Biron, duke de, conveys the young Chevalier to Vincennes,

, count, objections against electing a duke of Courland

during his life, ii. 376

Black-friars, resolutions taken for building a bridge at, iii. 86. Mr. Mylne's plan for, preferred, 387. Inscription on the the foundation of, 388

Blair, Janet, her great age, iii. 96

Blakeney, general, remonstrates concerning the state of St. Philip's castle, i. 313. His defence and surrender of that fort, 325. He arrives in England, and is created an Irish lord, 339

Blandford man of war, taken by the French, and returned,

i. 286

Bligh, general, commands the land forces in the expedition against Cherbourg, ii. 252. His operations in the neighbourhood of St. Malo, 256. His rear guard attacked at St. Cas, 259

Blond, French frigate, taken, iii. 390, 394

Boles, captain, his bravery, ii. 298

Bolingbroke (St. John) viscount, his intrigues at the prince's court, i. 9

Bombardments, reflections on, iii. 104

Bombay, described, i. 200

Bompart, M. makes an unsuccessful attempt to relieve Guadalupe, iii. 153

Boothby, Sir William, appointed to accompany the genadiers in case of their landing near fort Fouras, ii. 16

Boscawen, admiral, sent with a fleet to North America, i. 243. Account of his expedition, 248, 279. He is appointed a commissioner of the admiralty, ii. 8. Sails for North America, 240. Assists in the reduction of Cape Breton, 279. Returns to England, 294. He receives the thanks of the house of commons, iii. 70. Defeats M. de la Clue's squadron, 105. Is driven from the French coast by bad weather, 397. His operations in the bay of Quiberon, iv. 12

Boston, Sir William Irby, created lord, iv. 224, in New-England, described, i. 215

Bouffon, French man of war, taken, iv. 238

Bougainville, M. de, detached to watch general Wolfe's mes tions, iii. 185. Makes an unsuccessful attempt to re-inforce M. Montcalm, 190, and to relieve Quebec, 195

Bouquet, colonel, assists in the expedition against fort du Quesne, ii. 293

Boyd, Mr. his hazardous attempt to reach Mr. Byng's fleet,

i. 329

Boys, commodore, watches the armament of M. Thurot, iii. 112. Who eludes him, 119, 126. He is obliged to put in at Leith for provisions, 126

Braddock, general, his unfortunate expedition, i. 254 Bradshaw, captain, relieves a distressed crew at sea, iii. 97

Bradstreet, colonel, reinforces the garrison of Oswego, i. 272. Repulses a body of French on the river Onondago. 355. Affists in the attempt upon Ticonderoga, ii. 287. Takes and destroys fort Frontenac, 290

Bray, captain, his gallant exploit with a French privateer.

ii. 234

Bremen, taken by the French, ii. 110, evacuated, 321. A new attempt upon it, iv. 277

Brereton, major, his gallant behaviour at Madrass, iii. 202. His unfuccessful attack on Wandewash, 206. His bravery and death there, 220

-, captain, wounded, iii. 209

Breslau, taken by the Austrians, ii. 154. Recovered by the Prussians, 159

Brew, Mr. his laudable behaviour at Anamaboe, ii. 238 Brian, ---, an Irish mariner, his resolution, iii. 396

Briffac, duc de, routed at Coveldt, iii. 235

Brifiel, riot at, i. 159

- (Hervey) earl of, ambaffador in Spain, his inftructions concerning the measures of that court, iv. 336, 350. With the Spanish minister's answer, 351. He is recalled, 353

British fishery erected, i. 70. Laws for the improvement of,

444 - Museum erected, 152

Broderick, admiral, his thip burnt at fea, ii. 244. And he narrowly escapes, 245. He affists in the defeat of M. de Clue's fquadron, iii. 108

Broglio, marechal, affists in passing the Weser, ii. 102, and taking Minden, 103. Enters Bremen, 320. Which is evacuated, 321. He defeats the prince of Ysenbourg at

- Sanger-

Sangerhausen, 330. Manages the artillery at Landwernhagen, 335. Defeats prince Ferdinand at Bergen, iii. 225. His progress in the dominions of Hanover, 228. Commands a separate corps near Minden, 230. Attacks the left of the allies at the battle of Minden, 232. Supersedes Contades and D'Etrées in the command of the army, 240. Attempts prince Ferdinand's camp, 241, iv. 32. Skirmishes between his troops and the allies, iv. 32. Exactions by his officers in Westphalia, 34. A detachment of his forces worsted at Vacha, 36. Situation of his army, ib. A fmall corps of it routed near Butzbach, 38. He is abandoned by the Wirtemberg troops, 39. Small skirmishes between his troops and the allies, ib. A detachment of his army victorious at Corbach, 40, and routed at Exdorf, 41, and Warbourg, 43. More skirmishes between his troops and the allies, 47, 48, 49, 50. A detachment of his army worsts the hereditary prince at Rhynbergen and Campen, 50. More skirmishes between his detachments and those of the allies, with various succefs, 56. Drives general Sporcken from his post on the Dymel, and obliges prince Ferdinand to repass the Lippe, 271. Is defeated by him at Kirch-Denckern, 272. Animosity between him and Soubise, 273. He retires to Cassel, ib. He penetrates into the electorate of Hanover, ib. Declines engaging the allies at Eimbeck, 280. Cantons his army in Cassel and the neighbourhood, ib Broglio, count de, drives general Luckner from Heligenstadt, iv. 267. Takes Duderstadt, but is forced to abandon it, ib. Takes possession of Wolfenbuttle, invests Brunswick, and is obliged to relinquish both, 277

Brograve, captain, take the Pheafant frigate, iv. 237

Brown, count, fights the king of Prussia at Lowoschutz, i. 39e. Attempts a junction with the Saxon army, 392. He and prince Charles of Lorrain, defeated near Prague, ii. 76. In which they are besieged, 80. His death, ib.

my against the Prussians, ii. 344. Joined by general Fermer on the borders of Silesia, 345. Obtains a passport from the Prussian general to remove for the cure of his wounds received at Zorndorf, 353. He is a native of Scotland, ib

Brubl, count, his lady arrested and ordered to leave Saxony, ii. 65 See Justifying Proofs

Brunswick-

Brunswick-Wolfenbuttle Bevern, Charles, duke of, furnishes troops to the allied army, ii. 93. His territories possessed by the French, 109. With whom he concludes a treaty, 315. He expostulates with his brother Ferdinand concerning the hereditary prince, 316. Means found to reconcile him to their proceedings, 318. Arret of the Evangelical body at Ratisbon in his favour, with the emperor's answer, iii. 263 See Ferdinand.

-, Charles William Ferdinand, hereditary prince of, distinguishes himself at Hastenbeck, ii. 107. Reduces Hoya and Minden, 323. Conducts the front at Crevelt, 328. Secures the pass of Wachtendonk, 332. His progress, iii. 224, 230. He defeats the duke de Briffac at Coveldt, 235. Passes the Weser in pursuit of the French, 238. Beats up the quarters of the duke of Wirtemberg at Fulda, 240. Detached with a reinforcment to the king of Prussia, 241. Rejoins the allied army, iv. 34. Makes an incursion into the county of Fulda, 39. Is worsted at Corbach, 40. He retrieves his honour at Exdorff, 11. His bravery and success at Warbourg, 43. He beats up the quarters of a French detachment at Zierenberg, 48. He makes to the Lower Rhine, 51. Is worsted at Rhynberg and Campen, 52. Repasses the Rhine, 54. Attempt against him defeated, 56. He takes Fritzlar, 268. He is routed at Stangerode, 269. His brother prince Henry mortally wounded, 276. He destroys the French magazines and ovens at Dorften, ib. Scours the open country of Hesse-Cassel, relieves Brunswick, and retakes Wolfenbuttle, 277

, Francis, prince of, killed at Hochkirchen, ii. 356

—, Louis, prince of, appointed tutor to the prince of Orange, and captain general of the United Provinces, iii. 76. Memorial delivered by him on the part of the kings of Great Britain and Prussia, 262. Declaration delivered to him in answer thereto, iv. 31

Buccow, general, forced to abandon the fiege of Koninf-gratz, ii. 343

Buckbourg, count of, taken into British pay for the defence of Hanover, ii. 189. His behaviour at Minden, iii. 232, 234. Arret of the Evangelical body at Ratisbon in his favour, with the emperor's answer, 263

Bulow, major, furprizes a French party at Marpurg and Butzbach, but is worsted at Munden, iv. 49, and at

Schaken, 56

Burnaby

Burnaby, Mr. his remonstrance to the magistrates of Fribourg, i. 45

Burnet, captain, affists in taking Guadaloupe, iii. 138 Burton, col. commands the right wing at Quebec, iii. 415 Bushadgia surrendered to Admiral Watson, and colonel Clive, i. 374

Buffy, M. recalled from Hanover, i. 249. Taken prisoner in the East Indies. iii. 220. His negotiation at London for peace, iv. 294. He returns to France, 320

Bute (Stuart) earl of, called to the council board, iv. 147. His character, 152. He is appointed one of the fecretaries of state, 222. Peerage conferred on his countess, 224. Reflection concerning him, 333

Butter allowed to be imported from Ireland into England.

il. 215. iii. 24. iv. 200

Butturlin, general, fends detachments into the Prussian dominions, iv. 284. Joins the Austrians, but retreats with the greatest part of his army into Poland, where his magazines had been burnt by the Prussians, 285

Byng, admiral, fent on a cruize to intercept De la Mothe, i. 250. He fails for the Mediterranean, 315. Arrives at Gibraltar, 316. His letter to the admiralty from that place, 317. Sails from thence, 318. Falls in with the French fleet, 319. His engagement with them, ib. He returns to Gibraltar, 322. Fate of his letter giving an account of the engagement, ib. Animofity fomented against him, ib. He is superseded, and sent home a prifoner, 324. Message from the admiralty to the house of commons concerning him, 414. His trial, 470. He is recommended to mercy, 472. Proceedings in parliament relating to him, 475. He is executed, 477. Paper delivered by him to the marshal of the admiralty, 478. Remarks upon his fate, 479

Byron, captain, destroys a French fleet, and the town of Chaleurs, iii. 440

C.

MAILLAUD, major, incommodes Lally in the fiege of Madrass, ili. 203

Calcutta described, i. 204. Account of its being taken by the viceroy of Bengal, 364. And of its reduction by admiral Watfon and colonel Clive, ii. 46

Calendar altered, i. 108

No. 39.

Dd

Cali-

Calicut, in the East Indies, described, i. 201

Cambric, an act concerning, iii. 46

Cambridge, university, the duke of Newcastle elected chastcellor of, in preference to the prince of Wales, i. 36. Prizes bestowed there by Mr. Finch and Mr. Townshend, ii. 415

Cameron, Dr. Archibald, taken and executed, i. 157

____, Donald, his great age, iii. 96

Campbell, general John, succeeds to the dukedom of Argyle, iv. 224

Canada, total reduction of, iii. 440

Candia, the king of, destroys a Dutch fettlement, iv. 246

Canning, Elizabeth, her remarkable story, i. 154.

Cape Breton, an account of the conquest of, ii. 279. The colours taken there exhibited at London, and deposited in St. Paul's cathedral, 285. The fortifications of its capital demolished, iv. I

Cape-coast-castle, in Africa, an attempt on, baffled, ii. 236 Capricieux, French man of war, destroyed, ii. 282

Carangoly taken by colonel Coote, iii. 218

Carical taken by the British forces, iv. 11

Carkett, lieutenant, his bravery, ii. 242

Carlos. See Charles

Carlton, colonel, secures the western point of the isle of Orleans, iii. 186. Dislodges a party of the French at Point au Tremble, 190

Carnack, major, defeats the Mogul army, iv. 245 Carolina (North and South) described, i. 223

Caroline, princefs, her death and character, ii. 233

Carrickfergus, account of M. Thurot's descent at, iii. 392,

Carwar, in the Indies, described, i. 200

Carysfort, lord, presents a bill for the uniformity of weights and measures, iii. 348

Castries, M. de, worsts the hereditary prince at Rhynberg and Campen, iv. 53

Catawbas, Indians, their residence, i. 223. They espouse the British interest, 362

Cattle allowed to be imported into England from Ireland, iii. 37

Cavendish, lord Frederick, his motions at Kirch-Denckern, iv. 274

· Caylus,

Caylus, marquis de, his proceedings with regard to the neutral islands, i. 42.

Cayugas, Indians, make a treaty with the British colonies,

Celebre, French man of war, destroyed, ii. 282 Centaur, French man of war, taken, iii. 107

Ceylon, a Dutch fettlement on the island of, destroyed, iv.

Chabet, count de, furrenders Hoya, ii. 323

Charing-crofs, an act passed for widening the street from it to

Westminster hall, i. 417

Charles, king of Sicily and Naples, enters into a defensive alliance with France, Spain, Sardinia, &c. i. 53. And another with the emperor, the kings of Spain and Sardinia, and the duke of Parma, 129. Succeeds to the Spanish monarchy by the title of Charles III. king of Spain, iii. 274. Remarkable fettlement by him touching the fuccession to the Spanish and Sicilian dominions, ib. His wife conduct, iv. 20. Memorial delivered by the French minister to the court of London concerning him, 301. Note from his ambassador to Mr. Pitt, 304. Conduct of the court of England to him, 336, 350. His minister's answer to the British ambassador, 351. His ambaffador's note to the English secretary, 352. War declared against him in England, 354. The English secretary's answer to his minister's note, 355. Substance of the private treaty between him and France, 359. With remarks, 363

, III. king of Sardinia, effects a match between his eldeft fon and one of the infantas of Spain, and engages in a defensive alliance with France, Spain, &c. i. 52. Accedes to the treaty concluded at Madrid, between the emperor, king of Spain, &c. 129

In which he is besieged, So. Harrasses the rear of the besiegers in their retreat, 92

Charles-town in South Carolina, described, i. 224

Charlotta-Sophia, princefs of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, George III's declaration with respect of demanding her in marriage, iv. 227. Her contract figned, 229. Her arrival and nuptials, 230. Her coronation, 232. She dines at Guildhall, 332. Is addressed by the commons, 345. Settlement provided for her, 346.

Chelse-pensioners, a bill in behalf of, i. 236

D d 2

Cherbourg, the expedition against, ii. 252. The artillery taken there exposed at London, 265.

Cherokee-Indians, where settled, i. 223. They espouse the British interest, 362. A body of them join the English forces, ii. 35. New treaty with them, iii. 398. They recommence hostilities, 401. Their towns and villages deseroyed by colonel Montgomery, 404, 406. They take fort Loudon, 407. Are reduced by colonel Grant, and conclude a new treaty, iv. 247

Chevalier de St. George, the younger, arrested at Paris, i. 45. Received with great honours at Avignon, 48. Designs to make another attempt for the British crown,

iii. 113

Chevert, M. sent under M. d'Etrées into Germany, ii. 59. Assists in passing the Weser, 102. And in taking Minden, 103. Deseated by general Imhost at Meer, 333

Chevreuse, duke of, takes possession of Hanover as governor,

ii. 109

Chocolate, an additional duty on, iii. 9

Ghoiseul, duke de, his letter to Mr. Pitt, with the king of France's memorial concerning a negotiation for peace, iv. 292

Chugnuts, their treaty with the British colonies, iii. 161

Civil lift, establishment of, iv. 185, 198

Clark, colonel, his information concerning Rochefort, ii.

Glavering, colonel, attends general Hopson to the West-Indies, iii- 130. His operations at Guadaloupe, 147, 149, 150, 151, 453, 457. Sent express to England, 160

Clements, captain, affifts in defeating M. Thurot, iii. 394. Honours conferred on him for that exploit, 395

Clermont, count de, supersedes the duke de Richelieu, ii. 321.

Finds the troops in a deplorable condition, ib. He abandons Hanover, 323. Retreats to the Rhine, 324.

His army greatly harrassed in their march, ib. He is reinforced, 325. Detaches a corps under the count de St. Germain, 326. Which is defeated at Crevelt, 327.

He is succeeded in command by M. de Contades, 329.

Cleves, the dutchy of, taken by the French for the empress-queen, ii. 68, 131.

Clive, colonel, his first exploits in the East-Indies, i. 207, 208, 209, 210. He visits England, 363. Assists at the reduction of Geriah, 371. Some more of his operations, 374. He assists in retaking Calcutta, ii. 46. Defeats the Nabob

Nabob of Bengal, 47. Co-operates with the admirals Watson and Pocock, in the reduction of Chandenagore, 49. Worsts the Nabob a second time, and concurs in deposing him, 52. His measures to defeat the Dutch hostilities in the river of Bengal, iii. 210, 212

Closen, baron, defeats the hereditary prince at Stangerode,

iv. 269

Closter-Seven, the convention of, ii. 111. Disputes concerning it, 172, 311. Disapproved both by the courts of London and Versailles, 173

Coffee, an additional duty on, iii. 9

Coke, lord (earl of Leicester's son) supports the ministerial proceedings concerning the Westminster election, i. 102. His motion against Mr. Murray, 118

Colberg, an attempt upon, by the Russians, miscarries ii. 367. Invested by sea and land, iv. 91, 283. Reduced

289

Colby, captain, affifts in taking the Arethusa, iii. 102.

Cole, colonel, covers the retreat of colonel William's detachment at lake George, i. 267

Colling wood, captain, engages two French frigates, and takes one of them, iii. 103

Cologne, Clement Augustus, elector of, concludes a subsidiary treaty with England, i. 82. Which he renounces, 115. Protests against electing the archduke Joseph king of the Romans, 133. Espouses the French interest, 276. His remonstrance to the diet at Ratisbon concerning the behaviour of the Prussians, iv. 98. Mutual recrimination between him and the elector of Hanover, ib. His death, 268

Colville, lord, commodore at Halifax, iii. 410. Sails to the river St. Laurence, 418. Commands a squadron at Halifax, iv. 225

Comete, French frigate, taken, iv. 237

Compelling clause in the act of insolvency, reflections on, iv.

204, 346. It is repealed, 345

Confians, M. de, gets the command of a French fleet, iii.

111. With which he fails from Brest, 114. And is defeated by Sir Edward Hawke, 116. His letter to the secretary of the marine concerning his defeat, 120

-, M. defeated by col. Ford, iii. 205

, Marquis de, raises contributions in Embden, iv.

Conjiveram, taken by the English, iii. 206. Repossessed and abandoned by general Lally, 218

Connecticut, some account of, i. 215

Conoys, Indians, their treaty with the British colonies, iii.

Conqueror, man of war, loft, iv. 14

Consolidation of certain funds, i. 124. iii. 344

Conftantinople, disturbances at, iv. 20

Constitutional queries, resolutions concerning, i. 100

Contades, M. de, sent under M. d'Etrées into Germany, ii. 59. Takes possession of Hesse-Cassel, 109. Succeeds the count de Clermont in the command in Germany, 329. Sends a reinforcement to the prince of Soubise, 335. Penetrates into Westphalia, 337. Is defeated at Minden, iii. 231. Letters to him from the duc de Belleisle, 236. M. d'Etrées joined in command with him, 239. They are superseded by marechal Broglio, 240

Continental war, the motives of, i. 374. Reflections on, 376, 408, 415, 423, 425. ii. 186, 192, 197, 305, 314, 382, 390, 426, 433. iii. 13, 254, 294, 302, 352. iv. 15, 155, 197, 252, 270, 322.

Contrecœur, M. de, his operations in North America, i. 226 Conway, general, his motions at Kirch-Denckern, iv. 273

Coote, colonel, assists in the reduction of Calcutta, ii. 47.

Takes Wandewash and Carangoly, makes general Lally quit Conjiveram, and routs him at Wandewash, 218. And conquers the province of Arcot, 220. Invests Pondicherry, iv. 11, 103. Mr. Lally's proposals to him for the furrender of it, 104. His answer thereto, 106. Articles proposed to him by the chief of the Jesuits, 107

Cope, captain, his proceedings in the East Indies, i. 206 Coppice woods allowed to be converted into pasture or tillage, i. 452

Corn, an act relating to the bounty on, when exported, i. 140. Riots on account of its high price, 159, 340, 410. ii. 32. Bill to prohibit the exportation of, i. 413. Further measures taken to remove the dearth of it, 426. Inquiry into the causes of its scarcity, 456. Regulations with respect to the exportation and importation of it, ii. 203. Absurdity of granting a bounty on the exportation of it, 204. Bills relating to the distillery and exportation of it, iii. 15. Remarks on the price of it, 23. See Distillation

Cornish,

Cornish, admiral, reinforces admiral Pocock, iii. 210. Reduces Carical, iv. 11. Affists in taking Pondicherry, 110 Cornwall, acts relating to leases in, iii. 341, iv. 205

Cornwallis, hon. Edward, appointed governor of Nova Scotia, i. 40. His proceedings there, 41, 180. Embarks with admiral Byng for Minorca, 315

Coromondal coast described, i. 199, 201

Cotes, admiral, fails for the West Indies, ii. 30. Advices from him, 234, 238, 298. iii. 102

Cotymore, lieutenant, treacherously murdered by the Indians, iii. 402

Court de St. Florentine, French man of war, taken, iii. 100 Courland, prince Charles of Saxony, elected duke of, ii. 376 Covent-garden, fire near, iii. 354

Crauford, general, affists in the reduction of Belleisle, iv. 254. Where he is taken prisoner, 258

Creek Indians, their residence, i. 223 Crowle, Mr. proceedings against, i. 102

Crown-point fort erected, i. 175. Plan for the reduction of it, iii. 170. With remarks, 171. Taken possession of by general Amherst, 174.

Crump, colonel, his operations at Guadaloupe, iii. 146, 147, 150. Left commander there, 160

Cudalore taken by general Lally, ii. 304

Culm, act concerning the exportation of, from Milford haven, iii. 342

Cumberland county, riots in, i. 410

-, duke of, appointed one of the regents, i. 96. Debates thereon, 97. One of the commissioners for opening the parliament, 194. And one of the lords of the regency, 247. He visits Portsmouth, 251. His in-And general structions to general Braddock, 256. Fowke, 351. Urges a descent on the French coaft, ii. 8. Takes the command of the allied army, 98. Passes the Weser, 100. Is followed by the French, 101. Defeated at Hastenbeck, 104. He retreats to preserve the communication with Stade, 107. He is pressed on all sides by the French, 110. And is forced to fign the convention of Clotter-Seven, 111. By which the French are let loofe against the king of Prussia, 113. Remarks on that step, 115. Its consequences, ib. He returns to England, and refigns all his military commands, 115. Chief, mourner at his father's funeral, iv. 154

Cum

Cumming, Thomas, projects and affifts in the conquest of Senegal, ii. 271

Cunningham, colonel, his patriotism and gallantry, i. 314, 315, 332

Curzon, Sir Nathaniel, created lord Scarsdale, iv. 238
Cuft, Sir John, elected speaker of the house of commons,
iv. 337

Custrin, detail of the Russian enormities at, ii. 349

Czarina, Elizabeth, appearance of a rupture between her and Sweden, i. 48. She is diffatisfied with the king of Prustia's interposition, 51. Disputes between her and Sweden, 81. She takes umbrage at the king of Pruffia's interposing therein, ib. Misunderstanding between them. 110. Her subsidiary treaty with Britain on account of Hanover, 280. She accedes to the defensive treaty between France and Hungary, 377. Her declaration at the Hague, 397. She equips an army and fleet for the affiftance of the queen of Hungary, ii. 62. Her declaration against the king of Prussia, 69. Her answer to the British minister, 72. Her seet blocks up the Prussian ports in the Baltic, 117, 133. And army takes Memel, 119. The Prussian declaration concerning her, ib. The Prussian general's declaration on her troops advancing against Prussia, 133. Which are attacked at Norkitten, 136. And make a hafty retreat out of Prussia, 137. She accedes to the treaty between the courts of Vienna, Verfailles, and Stockholm, 180. Remarks on her engaging therein, 307. She fends two armies against the king of Prussia, 344. Who defeats them at Zorndorf, 347. She expresses a great zeal for the interests of the queen of Hungary and king of Poland, 376. Justifying proofs published concerning her by the court of Berlin, 435. With answers, 468. Her naval armaments retarded by a fire at Revel, iii. 243. Her troops defeat the Prussians at Zullichau, 247. And Cunersdorf, 251. Her answer to the British and Prussian memorials, iv. 31. Her troops enter Pomerania, 59. Which they evacuate, 62. Their motions towards Silesia, 62, 66, 69, 70, 72, 73. They make an irruption into Brandenburg, 77. And take Berlin, 78. Relation of their proceedings there, 79. With the answer thereto, 89. Her forces invest Colberg by sea and land, 91, 283. Penetrate into Silefia, Pomerania, and and New Marche, 284. Her grand army joins the Austrians, but the greatest part of it retreats to Poland, 285. Her forces before Colberg reduce that port, 289

D.

D'Affry, count, his memorial to the Dutch, concerning the English cruisers, Ostend, and Nieuport, ii. 269. His counter-memorial to that of England, iii. 270. Witnesses an engagement between an English and French frigate, iv. 234

Dalling, major, his station at the battle of Quebec, iii. 415,

416

Damien, R. Francis, his attempt to affaffinate the king of France, ii. 54

D'Anteuil, M. taken prisoner, i. 210

Dantzick refuses a Russian garrison, ii. 345

D'Apche, M. worsted by admiral Pocock, ii. 301, 303. He retires to the islands of Bourbon, 304. Defeated a third time by admiral Pocock, iii. 208

Darby, —, and his two sons hanged for murder, iii. 78 D'Argens, marquis, letter to him from the king of Prussia,

iv. 75

ľ

D'Argenson, M. removed from his office in the French ministry, ii. 57

D'Armentieres, M. assists in passing the Weser, ii. 102. Takes possession of Gottingen, 109. Worsted by the hereditary prince, iii. 239. His attempts to relieve Munster, ib Dartmouth in Nova Scotia burned by the Indians, i. 181

Dashwood, Sir Francis, his character, i. 25

i. 186. And feconds a motion for repealing a former act in their favour, 189. Proceedings on his election for Oxfordshire, 236

D'Aubsterre, count, his intrigues at the court of Vienna, i.

276. His declaration there, 283

Daun, count, takes the command of the Austrian army, ii. 85. His character, 86. He routs the king of Prussia at Kolin, 89. Defeats the prince of Bevern near Breslau, 153. Takes that town, 154. Worsted by the king of Prussia at Lissa, 157. He arrives at the Austrian camp at Koningsgratz, 338. Follows his Prussian majesty into Moravia, 340. Intercepts his convoys, and obliges him No. 39.

to raise the siege of Olmutz, 341. Remarks on his talents, 346. He is joined by the Imperial army, 353. His motions, 354. He routs the king of Prussia at Hochkirchen, 355. Advances to Dresden, 361. His message to the Prussian governor touching his burning the suburbs of that city, 363. He retires from Dresden, 367. Skirmishes between his army and the Prussians, iii. 243. Sends a reinforcement to the Russian army before the battle of Cunersdorf, 250. Surrounds and takes the Prussian army under general Finck, 259. Relieves Dresden, iv. 66. Part of his army defeated by the king of Prussia, 70. He abandons the blockade of Schweidnitz, 73. He is dangerously wounded and worsted at Torgau, 92. Maintains his ground in Saxony, 95, 281. Makes an attempt upon the army of prince Henry, 288

D' Avel, M. takes Embden, &c. ii. 103

Dean, forest of, riots in, i. 410

Deane, captain, his operations in the river St. Laurence, iii. 418, 432. He takes the Comete frigate, iv. 237

Death, captain, his fate, ii. 182

Debrifay, colonel, blown up at Guadalupe, iii. 145

Debtors, laws and reflections concerning the imprisonment of, iii. 33, 52, 55. iv. 346. Petition from, iv. 201. A& of infolvency in their favour, 202. The compulsive clause in it repealed, 345. See Imprisonment

De la Ciue, M. his squadron defeated by admiral Boscawen,

iii. 105. His leg broke, 107

De la Mothe, M. sails to America with a French squadron, i. 244. Part of which is taken, 248. He returns to Brest, 280. Arrives at Louisbourg, ii. 37

De la Touche, his defence and surrender of Martinique, iv.

264

De la Ville, general, throws a reinforcement into Olmutz, ii. 339. Commands a corps of Austrians in Silesia, 354. Undertakes the siege of Cosel, 360. Which he is forced to abandon, 366. Re-enters Silesia, iii. 246

Delawar, lord, created earl, iv. 223

Delaware Indians, espouse the British interest, i. 362. Treaty between them and the British colonies, iii. 161. iv. 248 Delgarno, colonel, appointed commander at Grand-terre,

iii. 160

Dennis, captain, takes the Raisonable French man of war,

Denmark,

Denmark, Frederick V. king of, his queen dies, i. 109. He mediates, by his minister, the convention of Closter-Seven, it. 111. His minister seconds the remonstrances of the French general concerning the breach of that treaty, 177. His prudent conduct, 390. His patriot schemes, iv. 24

Denny, governor, his conferences with the American Indians, iii. 166, 167, 168

Descent. See Expedition

Defeada island submits to general Barrington, iii. 158 D'Estaing, count, his success in the E. Indies, iv. 245

D'Etreés, M. fent with a French army into Germany, ii. 59. Follows the duke of Cumberland over the Weser, 101. Lays the electorate of Hanover under contribution, 104. Worsts the duke of Cumberland at Hastenbeck, ib. Is superseded by the duke de Richelieu, 108. Joined in command with M. Contades, iii. 239. Superseded by M. Broglio, 240.

D'Etreil, M. his defence and furrender of Guadalupe, iii.

140

le.

Z,

ed

uty

re, ar,

rk,

Deux-Ponts, prince of, reassembles the army of the empire, ii. 339. Joins general Daun, 353. Reduces Konigstein, and takes possession of the strong camp at Pirna, 354. In conjunction with marechal Daun deseats the king of Prussia at Hochkirchen, 355. Lays siege to Leipzig, 361. Obliged to retire, 367. Skirmishes between his army and the Prussians, iii. 244, 245. He joins general Haddick, who is worsted at Corbitz, 257. A party of his troops checked near Lutzen, iv. 39. Action between a body of them and the Prussians, 74. He takes Wirtemberg, Totgau, and Leipzig, 90. See Empire

De Villier, M. his operations in America, i. 227

Devonshire (Cavendish) duke of, appointed lord chamberlain, iv. 223. Hands the queen from the coach, 231

Diercke, general, defeated and taken by the Austrians, iii.

Dieskau, baron, defeated and taken, i. 266

Dinwiddie, Mr. governor of Virginia, his letter to a French commander concerning encroachments upon the English colonies, i. 177. Gives umbrage to the people of Virginia, 229. Makes an alliance with the Cherokees and Catawbas, 362

Distillation, of spirits from grain prohibited for a certain E e 2 time, i. 428. iii. 18. Arguments for and against the distillation of malt, ib. 305

Dixon, Mr. Jeremiah, sent to observe the transit of Venus, iv. 16

Doddington, George, created lord Melcomb, iv. 224

Dobna, count, assembles an army of Prussians in Pomerania, ii. 345. Messages between him and general Fermer, 353. He obliges the Austrians to abandon the siege of Leipzig, 367. His declarations on entering Poland, iii. 247. He is laid aside, 249

Doghariy, Mr. treacherously attacked by the Indians, iii.

402

Dolphin ship, deplorable incident on board of, at sea, iii.

Dominique island reduced, iv. 249

Dorset (Sackville) Duke of, his government of Ireland, i. 195 Douglas, Sir James, knighted, iii. 197. Operations of his fquadron at the Leeward islands, Iv. 10, 14, 249. He commands the squadron at the reduction of Dominique, 249

Downe, lord, killed at Campen, iv. 54

Draper, colonel, his gallant behaviour at Madrass, iii. 201,

Dresden seized by the king of Prussia, i. 387. Enormities committed there in the royal palace by the Prussians, 388. The suburbs of it burnt by the Prussian governor, ii. 361. The inhabitants of it grievously oppressed by that monarch, 371. It is recovered by the Imperial army, iii. 256. An unsuccessful attempt upon it by the king of Prussia, iv. 66

Drucour, M. his defence and furrender of Louisbourg, ii.

Drummond, captain, contributes to the victory at Minden, iii. 234, 235

Dublin, dangerous infurrections in, iii. 124

Duc d'Aquitaine French Indiaman taken, ii. 31, loft, iv. 110

Duc de Chartres French East India-ship taken, iii. 101

Duc de Penthievre French Indiaman taken, ii. 31

Duff, captain, assists in taking a French privateer, iii. 101. Cruises with a squadron on the French coast, 114. Narrowly escapes being taken, 115

Dunbar, colonel, fome account of his proceedings in America, i. 257

Dun-

Duncannon, viscount (Besborough's son) appointed a commissioner of the treasury, ii. 7

Dupleix, M. his proceedings in the East Indies, i. 205, 211 Du Quesne, M. deseated and taken by admiral Osborne, ii.
241. See Fort

Durell, admiral, some of his operations in the river St. Laurence against Quebec, iii. 181, 192. He is thanked by the house of commons, 198

Dury, general, killed at St. Cas, ii. 261

f

Dutch, their internal conduct after the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, i. 52. Requisition of 6000 of their troops made by the British minister, 300. Which they decline complying with, 301. An act concerning the Scotch brigade in their service, 310. They grant the French a free passage through their territories, ii. 68. Colonel Yorke's memorial to them concerning Oftend, &c. 165. An instance of their partiality, 237. A great number of their ships taken and condemned by the English, 267. On which their merchants clamour, 268. And present a famous petition to the states, 269. Answer to their charge against the English cruisers, 392. Remarks on the English conduct and theirs, 397. Conferences between the British ambassador and their states, 400. The management of their princess regent, 401. Substance of a letter from the States-general to the states of Holland and West-Friesland, 403. Prince Louis of Brunswick appointed their captain-general, iii. 76. More of their ships taken and condemned by the English, 77, 102. They are acknowledged by the French to be the only support of their colonies in the Welt Indies, 127. They supply the French with provisions at Guadalupe, 144, 148. Their hostilities to the English in the river of Bengal, 210. They fend deputies to England, 266. General Yorke's memorial to them, 269. And count D'Affry's, 270. They supply the French settlements in America, iv. 5. Mr. Yorke's memorial to them concerning their hostilities in Bengal, 25. They complain of the neutrality of their coast being violated by the English, 234. Their settlement on Ceylon destroyed, 246. They resolve to augment their marine, 264

E.

EARTHQUAKES, an account of two at London, i. The effects of the prediction of a third by a crazy foldier, 79. A dreadful one at Lisbon, 293. Several in Syria, iv. 19

East-Friesland, dispute concerning, between the king of Prussia and elector of Hanover, i. 130, 163. It is invaded by the French, ii. 103.

East-India company obtain new privileges, i. 65. The mutiny-act extended to their settlements, 189. An account of their sactories along the coasts of Malabar and Coromandel, 199. Convention between them and the French company, 211. Violated by them both, 363. They are enabled to maintain a military force in their settlements, 417. The bravery of three of their captains, ii. 33. Further sums granted for the defence of their settlements, iii. 6. Hostilities between them and the Dutch, 210. And accommodation, 213. Further grants for their settlements, 291, iv. 191. The martial law extended to more of their settlements, 200. Some of them taken by the French, 245

East-Indies, transactions in, i. 199, 363. ii. 46, 300. iii. 200.

iv. 11, 103, 244

Eastwood, captain, his success, iii. 102
Eccho French ship of war taken, ii. 282

Edgecumbe, captain, reinforces admiral Byng, i. 316, 327 Edinburgh, an act for the improvement, &c. of, i. 141

Edmonson, Mary, hanged, ii. 79

Edwards, captain, his success, iii. 102

Effingham (Howard) earl of, embarks with admiral Byng for

Minorca, i. 315

Egmont (Percival) earl of, his character, i. 9. His motion concerning the negotiation of peace, 33. His remarks on the king's speech, 89. He opposes the general naturalization-bill, 98. And the court motion concerning the election for Westminster, 102, 118. His exceptions to the address to the king, 136. His motion concerning the mutiny-bill, 139. His proceedings on the bill for the naturalization of the Jews, 145, 187, 189. He opposes the extension of the mutiny-act to the East-India company's settlements, 189

Egremont (Wyndham) earl of, note to, from the Spanish ambassador, iv. 352. With his answer, 355

Elections, acts for regulating, ii. 217. iii. 332

Elizabeth-Caroline, princess, her death and character, iii. 76 Elliot, Mr. appointed a lord of the admiralty, ii. 8. He urges the convenience of a militia in Scotland, iii. 316

M. Thurot's squadron, 394. Honours conferred on him for that exploit, 395

—, colonel, bravery of his regiment at Exdorff, iv. 42 Elphinston, captain, takes a French ship on the coast of Holland, iv. 234

Embden East-India company established, i. 51. The town of, seized by the French, ii. 59, 103. British complaisance to its India trade, 215. The town is evacuated by the French, 241. And its country, 324. Laid under contribution by the French, iv. 277

Emeraude French man of war taken, ii. 181

Emperor. See Francis, Hungary

Empire, army of the, raised, ii. 122. Many of its troops unwilling to serve against the king of Prussia, ib. Assembles under the prince of Saxe-Hildburghausen, 132. Joins the French under the prince of Soubife, 140. They retreat before the king of Prussia, ib. Take Gotha, Erfurth, and Weimar, 141. Reinforced by general Laudohn, they march to Weisenfels in Thuringia, 144. They are defeated by the king of Prussia at Rosbach, 147. It is dispersed, 151. Re-assembles near Bamberg in Franconia under the prince of Deux-Ponts, 339. Join the Auftrians, 353. Reduce Konigstein, and take possession of the strong camp at Pirna, 354. In conjunction with the Austrians defeat the king of Prussia at Hochkirchen, 355. Attempt the fiege of Leipzig, 361. But forced to abandon it, 367. Part of, attacked by the Pruffians at Asch, iii. 244. Retires before prince Henry of Prustia, ib. A body of, defeated near Hoff, 245. Takes Leipzig, Torgau, and Dresden, 256. Joins general Haddick, and is worsted at Corbitz, 257. Part of it checked near Lutzen, iv. 39. Action between a part of it and the corps under general Hulsen, 74. Wirtemberg, Torgau, and Liepzig, taken by them and the Austrians, 90. It retires into Franconia, 65. A party of it dislodged from Schwartz, 282. It is worsted by the Prussians near Leipzig, 283. Goes into winter-quarters, 288

Enormities, account of some, prevalent in England, i. 56, 108. iii. 77. iv. 225. See Murders, Riots

Entreprenant French man of war destroyed, ii. 282

Erfurth taken by the French and Imperialifts, ii. 141

Effex man of war loft, iii. 118

Evangelical body, arret of, in favour of Brandenburgh, Hanover, &c. with the emperor's answer, iii. 263

Excise, law enacted concerning summons by the commissioners of, iii. 45

Expedition against Rochesort and the isle of Aix, ii. 8. against St. Malo, 246, 255. Cherbourg, 252. Senegal, 273. Goree, 278, 294. Cape Breton, 279. Martinique, iii. 130. Guadaloupe, 136. Quebec, 180. Dominique, iv. 249. Belleisle, 251. Martinique, 336, 364

Expeditions, reflections on, ii. 262

F.

FAIDY, John, appointed director and receiver of the revenues of Hanover, ii. 310

Falkuer, captain, takes the Duc de Chartres, a French East-

India thip, iii. 101

Farquisar, colonel, appointed to accompany the grenadiers, in case of their landing near fort Fouras, ii. 16. Affists in taking Louisbourg, 284. And in defeating the French at Niagara, iii. 178

Faulkner, captain, his bravery and success, iv. 238

Felicité French frigate taken, iv. 234

Ferdinand VI. king of Spain, joins in a defensive league with France, Sardinia, &c. i. 53. His measures for cultivating the arts of peace, ib. 86, 129. He concludes a treaty with England, 85. Debates thereon, 89. Joins in a defensive treaty with the emperor, the kings of Sardinia and Sicily, and duke of Parma, 129. His conduct to England, 232, 285, 288. Neutrality of his coasts violated by admiral Osborne's squadron, ii. 242. His ambassador's effects plundered by English privateers, 267. His death, iii. 273

_____, nominated king of Naples by his father, iii. 275
______, prince, of Prussia, wounded at Prague, ii. 83
______, prince of Brunswick, takes possession of Leipzig for the king of Prussia, i. 386. Conducts a Prussian army into Bohemia, ii. 73. His behaviour in the battle near Prague,

Prague, 79. And at Kolin, 89, 91. Sent to defend Halberstadt, 143. From whence he is obliged to retire, ib. Appointed commander of the allied army, 176. Duke of Richelieu's expostulations with him, ib. His answer, 177. His proceedings upon affembling the allied army, 178. He is checked at Zell, and obliged to retire, 179. He detains his brother's fon and troops, 316. His brother's expostulations with him on that transaction, ib. He takes possession of Bremen, Verden, &c. and detaches parties after the French, 323, 324. He passes the Rhine, 325. Defeats a detachment of the French at Crevelt, 327. Reduces Dusseldorp, 329. He resolves to retreat, 331. Repasses the Rhine, 334. Is reinforced by the British troops under the duke of Marlborough, ib. Retires to Munster, 337. Is worsted at Bergen, iii. 225. A British inspectorgeneral fent to him meets with a cold reception, 227. Caufe of his animofity to lord George Sackville, 229. He defeats the French at Minden, 231. His orders after that action, 233. He marches in pursuit of the French, 230. Who make an attempt upon his camp, 241. He retires to Marpurg, ib. He worfts a French detachment at Dillembourg, iv. 33. Receives a reinforcement of British troops, 37. Defeats the French at Warbourg, 43. Miscarries in an attempt upon Gottingen, 57. Upon Cassel, 269. And Ziegenhayn, 270. He retires behind the Dymel, ib. Remark on his conduct, ib. Is obliged to repass the Lippe, 271. He defeats marechal Broglio and the prince de Soubife at Kirch-Denckern, 272. Offers battle to marechal Broglio at Eimbeck, 278. Goes into winter-quarters, Fermer, general, gets the command of a Russian army against the Prussians, ii. 344. Takes possession of Koningsberg, ib. Pillages Pomerania, ib. Is joined by general Brown on the frontiers of Silesia, ib. Into which he sends ravaging parties, ib. He is defeated at Zorndorf, 347. Messages between him and general Dohna, 353. He is of Scottish extract, ib

Ferrers (Shirley) earl, apprehended, iii. 371. His trial, 375. Conviction, 379. And execution, 380

Finch, Edward, his encouragement to learning at Cambridge,

Finck, general, surrounded and taken, with his whole army, by count Daun, iii. 259
No. 39.

F f

Fisher,

Fisher, colonel, routs a body of Hanoverians at Tecklenburgh, ii. 99

Fishery, British, scheme for improving, i. 29, 70, 444

Fishing tackle, the convenience of, on board of ships, iii. 97 Fishmongers, bills relating to, ii. 220. iii. 326

Fitzroy, colonel, thanked by prince Ferdinand for his behaviour at Minden, iii. 234

Five nations (Indian) or Iroquois, their habitation, i. 216.
Their former and present state, 217. An English garrifon among them massacred, 355. They are abandoned to the French, ii. 35

Flemming, count. See Justifying Proofs

Fleur de Lys, French frigate, destroyed, iv. 10

Forbes, admiral, his reasons for not figning the warrant for admiral Byng's execution, i. 474. He is continued a commissioner of the admiralty, ii. 8

- ---, general, detached to fort Du Quesne, ii. 279. Which he takes possession of, 292. And calls it Pittsburg, 293. He concludes treaties with the Indians, 294. Builds a block-house near Lyall-Henning, ib. Dies at Philadelphia, ib
- Ford, colonel, defeats M. Conflans in the East Indies, iii. 205. Routs the Dutch at Chandanagore and Chinchura, 213

Formidable, French man of war, taken, iii. 117

Forrest, captain Arthur, his bravery and success, ii. 234, 238. The overscer of his plantation murdered by the negroes, iv. 6. Prize taken by his ship, 248

Forrester, captain, engages the Dutch gallantly in the river of Bengal, iii. 212

Forfer, Mr. treacherously affaulted by the Indians, iii. 402
Fort-Bay-Verte taken by general Monckton, i. 253

- Beau Sejour built, i. 181. Taken by general Monckton, and called Fort Cumberland, 253

- fur la riviere au Beuf, built, i. 177

- Chignecto built, i. 179. Taken by major Laurence,
- --- Crown-point built, i. 175. See Crown-point
- Cumberland built at Wills's creek, i. 254

- Beau Sejour so called, i. 253

— Du Quesne sounded, i. 227. Surrendered to the French, 228. Recovered by general Forbes, ii. 292. Called Pittsburg, 293

--- Frontenac taken and destroyed, ii. 290

- Fort-Johnson, stratagem against it frustrated, ii. 44
- ___ at Lake Eric, built, i. 177
- Loudon built, ii. 35. Reduced by the Cherokees, iii.
- Niagara built, i. 177. Plan for the reduction of it, iii. 170. With remarks, 171. It is surrendered to Sir William Johnson, 178.
- Ontario taken and demolished by the French, i. 358,
- Oswego described, i. 270. Neglect in not fortifying
- it, 272. Reduced and demolished by the French, 360,
- St. David's described, i. 201. Taken by general Lally, ii. 302
- St. Laurence built, i. 181
- St. Philip's, siege and surrender of, i. 325
- Ticonderoga, unsuccessful attempt against it, ii. 286. New expedition planned against it, iii. 170. With animadversions, 171. It is abandoned by the French, and taken possession of by general Amherst, 174
- William-Henry reduced by M. Montcalm, ii. 39
- Fortescue, captain, assists in taking a French East-Indiaman, iv, 237
- Foudroyant, French man of war, taken, ii. 242
- Foundling-hospital, remarks on, i. 416. Scheme in favour of it, ii. 213. Resolutions concerning, iii. 67. See Supplies
- Fouquet, M. de la Mothe, obliges general Jahnus to abandon the county of Glatz, ii. 338. Relieves Casel, 366. Is deseated at Landshut by general Laudohn, iv. 62
- Foruke, general, receives two letters from the war-office, i. 316. Is superseded for not understanding them, 324. His trial, 350. He is dismissed from the service, 353
- Fox, Henry, opposes the motion for hearing the sea-officers by counsel, i. 20. And the general naturalization bill, 98. His behaviour with regard to the Westminster election, 102. He is appointed secretary of state, 291. Letter to him from M. Rouillé, 304. With his answer, 305. His motion for introducing German troops, 311. He has early notice of the French designs against Minorca, 461. Appointed receiver and paymaster-general of the army, ii. 8. iv. 223
- Foy, captain, contributes to the victory at Minden, iii. 234,

rt

France. See Lewis XV.

Francist, on the Mayne, seized by the French, iii. 223
Francis, emperor, treaty concluded between him, the kings of Spain, Sardinia, and Sicily, and the duke of Parma, i. 129. He concludes a new treaty with France, and claims the affistance of the Germanic body against Prussia, 398. Observes a neutrality, as grand duke of Tuscany, ii. 67. His answer to the arret of the Evangelical body at Ratisbon, iii. 263

Frankland, commodore, sent with a squadron to the West-

Indies, i. 280

Frazer, colonel Simon, anecdotes of some of his officers, iii.

Quebec, 415

Frederick, king of Sweden, appearance of a rupture between him and the Czarina, i. 48, 81. Amused with the hopes of having Hesse Cassel erected into an electorate, 116. His death, ib

- V. See Denmark

- III. king of Prussia, his interposition in an apparent rupture between Russia and Sweden, i. 49. His internat measures, 51. He gives fresh umbrage to the Czarina by his interfering in the disputes between her and Sweden, 81. Opposes the election of the archduke to be king of the Romans, 83. Misunderstanding between him and the Czarina, 110. Continues opposing the election of a king of the Romans, 111. Dispute between him and the elector of Hanover concerning East-Friesland, 130. Misunderstanding between him and the British court concerning the seizure of his ships, ib. His Improvement of Pomerania, 132. He renders the defign of electing a king of the Romans abortive, 135. Proceedings of the diet of the Empire relating to the dispute between him and the elector of Hanover concerning East-Friesland, 163. His spirited declaration in consequence of the treaty between England and Russia, 283. He listens to a negotiation with England, 284. And concludes it, 302. His motives for engaging in the war, 374. Measures taken by him and the elector of Hanover, 378. The Queen of Hungary endeavours to frustrate his designs, 380. His demands of an explanation from that princess, 381. With her answers, 381, 382. He invades Saxony, and publishes a manifesto, 384. He enters Dresden, and blocks up the king of Poland and his troops at Pirna, 387. His behaviour at Drefden, 387, 388. He invades Bohemia, and fights count Brown at Lowoschutz. 390. Retreats into Saxony, 392. The king of Poland's memorial to the States general concerning his conduct; 394. Imperial decrees published against him, 396. His minister ordered to quit Versailles, 398. His answer to the king of Poland's memorial, 399. His justification of his conduct, 400. ii. 435. With remarks, i. 406, ii. 468. His letter to the Imperial diet rejected, i. 408. Several places belonging to him feized by the French, ii. 59, 68. State of the confederacy against him, 62. He is put under the ban of the Empire, ib. His strict attention. 63. His behaviour to several persons of rank at Dresden. 65. Skirmishes between his troops and the Austrians on the frontiers of Bohemia, 66. Declaration of the Czarina against him, 69. He enters Bohemia, 73. His troops under the prince of Bevern defeat the Austrians at Reichenberg, 74. He gains a complete victory over the Austrians near Prague, 76. He invests Prague, 80. And bombards it, 84. He is defeated at Kolin, 89. His letter to the earl Marshal of Scotland, 91. He evacuates Bohemia, 92. His mother dies, 93. The fatal confequences to him from the duke of Cumberland's measures, 113, 115: The French enter his dominions, 114. His ports in the Baltic blocked up by the Russian fleet, 117. And his town of Memel taken by their army, 119. His declaration on that occasion, ib. Many of the Imperial army unwilling to serve against him, 122. He encamps at Leitmeritz, 123. He marches into Lusatia, 124. His brother prince William leaves the army in difgust, and dies, 127. His army is weakened by fkirmishes and defertions, 128. His general's declaration concerning the Ruffians, 133. Skirmishes between them and his troops, 135. His general attacks them near Norkitten, 136. His majesty dares the Austrians to a battle, 138. He marches against the united army of the French and the Empire, who upon his approach retreat, 140. He finds an attack upon them impracticable, and retires, 141. Action between his troops and the Austrians at Goerlitz, ib. Part of his forces gives a check to the French in Halberstadt, 143. But his general is obliged in his turn to retire, ib. Several parts of his dominions invaded by the French, Swedes, and Austrians, ib. His queen and family remove from Berlin to Magdebourg, 145. He subjects jects Leipzig to military execution, ib. He defeats the French and Imperial army at Rosbach, 147. Part of his troops defeated at Breflau, 153. He beats the Auftrians at Lissa, 157. Retakes Breslau, 160. And invests Schweidnitz, 161. Becomes master of all Silesia, ib. The Swedes invade his territories in Pomerania, and publish a declaration, ib. His counter-declaration, 162. Success of his troops against the Swedes, 163. His letter to king George II. 169. Declaration to his minister from the British court, 170. His second treaty with Britain. 100. Complaifance of the British parliament to his Embden company, 215. He raises contributions in Swedish Pomerania, in Saxony, and Mecklenburg, 308. Remarks on his proceedings, 309. State of the armies for and against him, 310. He retakes Schweidnitz, and fends detachments into Bohemia and Glatz, 338. Enters Moravia, and invests Olmutz, 339. He is followed by count Daun, 340. Who forces him to raise the siege of Olmutz, 341. And to retire into Bohemia, 342. He marches to the Oder, 346. And defeats the Russians at Zorndorf, 347. Messages between his commander and general Fermer, 353. He is surprised and defeated at Hochkirchen, 355. Retires to Dobreschutz, 357. And thence to Silefia, 359. His governor of Drefden destroys its suburbs, 361. Restections on that measure, 363. His minister's answer to the Saxon minister's complaint on that outrage, 365. With remarks, ib. The Ruslians miscarry in their attempt upon his town of Colberg, 367. His furprising conduct and motions, 368. He oppresses the inhabitants of Saxony, 369. His further proceedings and declaration with respect to that electorate, 371. With reflections, ib. His officers oblige the Swedes to relinquish Pomerania, 374. His third treaty with Britain, 428. Remarks on it, 433. Justifying proofs published by him, copy of, 435-467. The court of Vienna's answers to them, 468-478. He receives a reinforcement from the allied army, iii. 241. Progress of his troops against the Swedes, 242, 243. He sends a detachment to Gotha, &c. 242. Another into Poland, 243. And a third into Mecklenburg, ib. A battalion of his grenadiers made prisoners, ib. He detaches prince Henry into Bohemia, ib. And Franconia, 244. He vin dicates his own conduct with respect to his prisoners, 246. His troops routed by the Russians at Zullichau, 247.

His general's declaration on his entering Poland, ib. He takes the command of general Wedel's corps, 250. Is routed at Cunersdorf, 251. His two billets to his queen, 252, 254. Advantages gained by his forces in Saxony. 256. His army under general Finck furrounded and taken, 259. And that under general Diercke, 260. Memorial delivered in his name at the Hague by duke Lewis of Brunswick, 262. Arret of the Evangelical body at Ratisbon in his favour, with the emperor's answer to it, 263. He Employs and intercedes for the earl Marshal of Scotland, 349. His letter to king Stanislaus, iv. 30. Answer to the memorial delivered in his name at the Hague, 31. A detachment of his army checks a party of the Imperialists near Lutzen, 39. His general in Pomerania routed and taken by the Swedes, 58. Advantages gained over his troops and the Austrians in Saxony, 50. His forces under general Fouquet worsted by general Laudohn, 62. He makes an unsuccessful attempt upon Dresden, 66. And obtains a victory over general Laudohn, 70. Worsts general Beck, 73. Raises the blockade of Schweidnitz, ib. An engagement between his general, Hulsen, and a corps of Imperialists, 74. His letter to the marquis d'Argens concerning his dangerous fituation, 75. His capital of Berlin taken by the Austrians and Russians, 78. His account of their outrages there, 79. With their His critical fituation, 90. He attacks answer, 89. count Daun at Torgau, 92. His intimation to the states of Westphalia, 97. Memorials against him to the diet at Ratisbon, exhibited by the electors of Cologne and Saxoby, and duke of Mecklenburg, 97. Remarks on his fituation, 280. Exploits of his partizans, 282. Alliance faid to be contracted between the Ottoman Porte and him, ib. Operations of some of his partizans against the Swedes and army of the Empire, 283, 284. And Rufsians, 284, 285. He endeavours to prevent the junction of the Austrians and Russians, 285. Sends a detachment into Poland, ib. He approaches towards Breflau, 287. He loses Schweidnitz, 286. Conspiracy to seize his person, 287. Remarks on that attempt, 288

Frederick, prince of Wales, the difference between his father and him increased, and his adherents join the opposition in parliament, i. 8. He is disappointed in his hopes of being elected chancellor of the university of Cambridge, 36. Is chose governor of the British fishery, 72. His death and character, 95. His declaration to the chiefs of the opposition, iii. 339

French cloths, act for prohibiting the importation of, to the ports of the Levant, iii. 39 prisoners in England supplied with necessaries by private contributions, iii. 199

Fribourg, the magistrates of, consent to the young Chevalier's residing there, i. 45

Frye, colonel, receives the submission of several French colonists, iii. 440

Fuentes, count de, sent ambassador to England, iv. 20. His note to Mr. Pitt, 304. And to the earl of Egremont, 352. He retires from England, 353. The earl of Egremont's answer to his note, 355

Fuller, Mr. Rose, prepares a bill for the punishment of governors of plantations, i. 456

Funck. See Justifying Proofs

Funds, some of them consolidated, i. 124. iii. 344

G.

GABEL taken by the Austrians, ii. 124
Gage, general, carries off general Braddock, i. 259.
Detached to command the army before Niagara, iii. 177.
Assists in the reduction of Montreal, 439

Gallisoniere, M. de la, conducts the French armament to Minorca, i. 316, 325. His engagement with admiral Byng, 319. After which he returns to Minorca, 330. And thence fails back to Toulon, 335

Game act paffed, i. 138

Gaming houses, acts relating to, i. 121, 442, 443

Gangam, in the E. Indies, described, i. 203

Gardelle, Theodore, remarkable murder by, iv. 219

Gardener, captain, killed in an engagement with M. du Quesne, ii. 242

Gascoyne, Sir Crispe, his laudable behaviour as a magistrate, i. 156

Gayton, captain, affifts in taking Guadaloupe, iii. 138

Geary, admiral, driven with Sir Edward Hawke, by bad weather, into Torbay, iii. 114

Genoa, republic of, enters into a defensive alliance with France, Spain, Sardinia, and Sicily, i. 53

Genoess

Genoese mariners (two) murder the master and crew of an English vessel, iii. 81 George II. returns from Hanover, i. 8. Difference between him and his eldest fon widened, ib. His speech at opening the parliament, i. 12, Debate on the address to him, 13. Supplies granted him, 16. His speech at the close of the fession, 34. He rejects the address of the university of Oxford, 35. Interposes between Russia and Sweden, 50. Scandalous infults offered to his subjects by the Moors, 54, 55. His speech to the parliament, 57. Subject of the debates on the address to him, 57. Supplies granted to him, 59, 60. He harangues the parliament, and fets out for Hanover, 77. Interferes in the disputes between Ruffia and Sweden, 81. Endeavours to get the archduke Joseph elected king of the Romans, 82. Grants a subsidy to the electors of Bavaria, Mentz, and Cologne, ib. Lends the elector of Saxony money on a mortgage, 83. Concludes a treaty with Spain, 85. His speech to the parliament, 87. Debates on the address to him, 88. Supplies granted him, 93. His message to parliament concerning a regency, 96. His speech at the end of the fession, 107. He interposes in the difference between the Czarina and king of Prussia, 110. And continues his intrigues for electing a king of the Romans, 111. Grants a subsidy to the elector of Saxony, 115. His speech at opening the session of parliament, 117. Supplies granted nery 120. Motion for an address against his subsidiary no. I fies, 127. He prorogues the parliament, ib. And sets out for Germany, 128. Disputes between him and the king of Prussia, concerning East-Friesland and the capture of some of his ships, 130. He engages in a subsidiary treaty with the elector Palatine, but is disappointed in his design of getting a king of the Romans elected, 133, 135. His speech at the meeting of the parliament, 135. Supplies granted him, 137. His harangue at the close of the session, 154. Proceeding of the diet of the Empire in the dispute between him and the king of Prussia relating to East-Friesland, 163. In which he is supported by the queen of Hungary, ib. His quarrel with the city of Munster, ib. He opens the session with a speech, 183. Supplies granted him, ib. His speech before the dissolution of the parliament, 191. He makes changes in his ministry, 192. Harmony restored in his family, 194. He opens the new parliament by commitfion, ib. Harrangues the parliament, 234. Supplies granted him, 235. His new subsidies to Saxony and Bavaria, in confideration of Hanover, allowed by parliament, ib. His message to the commons on an apparent rupture with France, 241. He gets an additional supply, 235, 242. His speech at the end of the session, 244. He prepares for war, 245. Motion against his going to Hanover, 246. He nominates a regency, 247. And fets out for Germany, 248. Rupture between him and France, 249. He gives orders for making general reprifals on the French, 250. Concludes an extraordinary treaty with Heffe-Caffel in defence of Hanover, 277. He returns to England, enters into a subsidiary treaty with Russia for the defence of his German dominions, 280. He enters into a negotiation with Prussia, 284. State of his navy, 287. His speech to the parliament, and their remarkable addresses, 288. His answer to those addresses, Alterations in his ministry, 201. He concludes a treaty with Prussia, 302. His speech at the end of the fession, 303. His minister's answer to the French secretary's letter, 305. He makes a requisition of 6000 Dutch troops, 308. Which the States decline complying with, 309. His message to the parliament, 310. He imports Hanoverians and Hessians, 312. His proclamation concerning horses and cattle, in case of an invasion, 341, A mutual declaration of war between him and France, 342, 345. He receives an address from the city of London on the conduct of his ministers, 348. His motives for the war in Germany, 374. Measures taken by him and the king of Prussia, 378. His speech at opening the parliament, 411. His meffage concerning admiral Byng, 414. Supplies granted to him, 415, 426. His message concerning the German war, 424. And a further supply, 425. His harrangue at the close of the selfion, 469. Petitions from lord Torrington, and admiral Byng, presented to him, 473. His message concerning that admiral, 475. He commands Mr. Pitt and Mr. Legge to refign, ii. 5. Which occasions clamours, 6. And addreffes to him, 7. Grants a fum to the innholders of Kent, 34. The queen of Hungary's and the Czarina's answers to his proposals for restoring the tranquillity of Germany, 71, 72. His preparations for the defence of Hanover,

Gg

No. 39.

Hanover, 93. Proposals for the neutrality of that electorate, 94. His declaration as elector, 95. He raises an army of Hanoverians, 98. His electorate laid under contribution, 104, 109. Convention for it at Closter-Seven. 111. His ministers quit the Austrian dominions, 129. His minister's memorial to the Dutch, 165. Letter to him from the king of Prussia, 169. His answer thereto. 170. His reasons as elector for taking up arms, 174. His electoral minister dismissed from Vienna, 179. His speech at opening the session of parliament, 184. Remarks on it, 185. Supplies granted him, 187. Observations on them, 191. His message to the commons, 106. Confidence reposed in him with respect to the salaries of the judges, 199. His fecond treaty with Pruffia. ib. He closes the session by commission, 230. Makes vigorous preparations, 231. His daughter, the princess Caroline, dies, 233. The administration of his electorate changed by the French, 310. Decree of the Aulic council against him as elector, 318, His minister's memorial in answer thereto, and the parallel published by the court of France, 319. His electoral dominions again invaded by the French, 335. His electoral memorial to the dyet of the empire, in answer to a decree of the Aulic council, 377. His particular reply to the parallel published by the court of Versailles, 381. He is alarmed with an invasion from France, 388. His minister's answer to the Dutch charge against the British cruisers, 392. And conferences with them on that subject, 400. Arts and sciences not munificently encouraged by him or his ministers. 412. He opens the fession of parliament by commission, 423. Borrows money as elector of Hanover, ib. Remarks on the speech to parliament, 425. He concludes a third treaty with Prussia, 423. Addresses of both houses to him, ib. Reflections on his Prussian alliance, 433. Supplies granted him, iii. 1. Messages from him to the commons, 14, 69. He closes the session by commission, 70. His army supplied with recruits by the bounty of several communities, 74. The death of his daughter the princess of Orange, and grand-daughter princess Elizabeth Caroline, 75. His messages to the parliament concerning an expected invasion from France, 109. Addreffed by the commons for a monument to general Wolfe, 198. His troops in America, and Germany, sup-Gg 2

plied with divers necessaries by private contributions, 199. Memorial delivered in his name by duke Lewis of Brunfwick, 262. Arret of the Evangelic body at Ratisbon in his favour, with the Emperor's answer to it, 263. His reception of the Dutch deputies, 268. His minister's memorial to the States general, 269. With the counter memorial by the French ambassador, 270. He opens the fession of parliament by commission, 282. Substance of the addresses of both houses to him, 286. granted him, 287. With reflections, 293. He is enabled to make leases in Cornwall, 341. He closes the seffion of parliament by commission, 350. Remark on his ministry's neglect of the scope of the war, 352. Captures by his and the French cruifers, 389. He defrays the charge of four astronomers to the East-Indies, iv. 15. Sends an ambassador extraordinary to Portugal, 22. His minister's memorial to the Dutch concerning their hostilities in Bengal, 25. He is offered Breda by the States-general for holding a congress, 29. Austria's answer to his memorial delivered at the Hague, by duke Lewis of Brunfwick, 31. His electoral dominions reinvaded by the French, 47. His memorial to the diet at Ratisbon concerning his being threatened with the ban of the Empire, and the elector of Cologne's conduct, 98 His death, 111, Character, 112. Recapitulation of the principal events of his reign, 113. Lamentation for his death, 117. State of commerce during his reign, 119. Of religion and philosophy, 120. Of fanaticism, 121. Of metaphysics and medicine, 124. Of agriculture, ib. Of mechanics, ib. Of genius, 125. Of music, 130. Painting, 131. And Sculpture, ib. Disposition of the forces and navy a little before his death, 132, 135. His funeral, 154.

George III. an act for the fettlement of a regency, in case of his succeeding to the crown in his minority, i. 96. Congratulations on his majority, iii. 85. He is proclaimed, iv. 145. His speech to the privy council, ib. Steps taken by him, 146. Addresses to him, 147. Letter to him from the bishop of London, ib. Encomium on him, 153. Merit patronized by him, 154. His sirst speech in parliament, 174. Address to him from the parliament, 180. Supplies granted him, 187. Resections on them, 197. Establishment of his civil list, 198. His message to the commons, 207. His speech in favour of the judges, 208. His message concerning a bill of credit, 210. His speech at the close of the session, before the dissolution of the parliament, 213. His patriotical declaration, 221. Great officers of state appointed by him, 222. Peers promoted and created, 223. Commanders in his army and navy, 224. His declaration with respect to his intended marriage, 227. Which is folemnized, 230. His coronation, 232. Great part of his German dominions in posfession of the French, 270, 275, 277. Account of the negotiation for peace between him and France, 201, 320. Reflections thereon, 321. He dines at Guildhall, 332. His conduct with respect to Spain, 336. speech to the new parliament, 338. Address of the commons to him, 341. Remarks on it, 344. Supplies granted him, 347. He permits letters of marque, and declares war against Spain, 354. His speech to the parliament, 356. Motives for his hostilities against Spain,

Georgia, the colony of, described, i. 225 Geriah, Angria's fort, taken, i. 373

German officers employed in America, i. 298 war, the motives of, i. 374. Reflections on, 376, 408, 415, 423, 425. ii. 186, 192, 197, 305, 314, 382, 390, 426, 433. iii. 13, 254, 294, 302, 352. iv. 15, 155,

197, 252, 270, 322 Gibson, Mr. proceedings against, i. 103

Gilchrift, captain, his success, ii. 181. iii. 99. He is disabled by a grape shot, 100

Gingen, captain, his proceedings in the East Indies, i. 206,

Gisors, count de, killed at Crevelt, ii. 329

Gift, Mr. his indiscreet conduct in America, i. 176

Glasgow city, gets a gratuity of 10,000 l. i. 16, 18

Glaiz reduced by general Laudohn, iv. 62

Gold coin, order concerning, with remarks, iii. 68

—— plate, dealers in, taxes upon, ii. 195. iii. 10, 44 Gordon, major, reinforces major Brereton, iii. 207

Gore, captain, killed, iii. 209

Goree, unsuccessfully attacked, ii. 278, but reduced, 294 town of, destroyed by fire, iv. 250

Gotha, taken by the combined army of France and the Empire, ii. 141

Gottingen,

Gottingen, forrendered to the French, ii. 109. Evacuated, 323. Repossessed by them, 335. iii. 228. And abandoned, 238.

Retaken by them, iv. 47

Gramont, countess of, a French ship of war, taken, ii. 183
Granby, marquis of (Rutland's son) complimented by prince Ferdinand at Minden, iii. 234. Conducts the British cavalry at Warbourg, iv. 44. His account of that action, 45. He conducts the van of the allies, 268. Takes Marpurg and Gudersberg, ib. Covers the siege of Cassel, 269. His advanced posts dislodged, 272. He maintains his ground at Kirch-Denchkern, 273, 274. Forces the French post at Coppeinhagen, 279. Takes up his winter quarters in East-Friesland, and the bishopric of Osnabrug, 280

Grant, general, defeated and taken near Fort Du Quesne,

ii. 293. Reduces the Cherokees, iv. 247

——, general, affifts in reducing Martinique, iv. 364——, general, detached by general Fouquet, iv. 62

Grantham, Sir Thomas Robinson, created lord, iv. 224

Granville (Carteret) earl of, his remarks on the bill for the British fishery, i. 72. Continued president of the council, iv. 222

Graves, captain, his success, iii. 98

Greenville, hon. George, opposes the reduction of the number of land forces, i. 93. Constituted treasurer of the navy, 193. His motions in favour of the seamen, 459, ii. 204

, hon. James, appointed a commissioner of the treasury, ii. 7

Greenwich, magazine, act for removing, iii. 321. Bill for the more effectual fecuring the payment of prize-money, &c. to the hospital of, 345

man of war taken, ii. 181

Griffin, general, conducts a reinforcement to the allied army, iv. 37. Signalizes himself at Corbach, 41

Grosvenor, Sir Richard, created lord, iv. 224

Guadaloupe, island, described, iii. 136. An account of the reduction of it by commodore Moore and general Hopson, 137, 452

Gueldres, befiged by the French, ii. 69, 98. Capitulates, 131

H.

HABEAS corpus, proceedings on the act of, ii. 221
Haddick, general, lays Berlin under contribution, ii.
144. Undertakes the fiege of Torgau, 361. Which he is forced to abandon, 367. Joins the Imperial army, and is worsted by the Prussians at Corbitz, iii. 256

Haines, -, hanged for murder, iii. 80

Haldane, colonel, attends general Hopson to the West-Indies, iii. 130

iv. 101

Haldemand, colonel, detached to La Galette, iii. 423

Hale, colonel, gratified with presents for bringing the news of the surrender of Quebec, iii. 196

Halket, Sir Peter, killed, i. 260

Hallifax (Montague) earl of, promotes the settlement of Nova Scotia, i. 39. Nominated lord lieutenant of Ireland, iv. 223 town, in Nova Scotia, founded, i. 41.

Halfey, captain, hanged for murder, iii. 77

Hamburgh menaced by the French and Austrian courts, ii.

Hamilton, dutchess of, appointed a lady of the bed-chamber, iv. 228 his invading Prussian Pomerania, ii. 161. He is forced to retreat, 163. His progress in Pomerania, 372. He throws up his commission, 374

the safety of the British traders on the Ohio, i. 177. Disagreement between him and the assembly, 261. He concludes a treaty with the Delaware Indians, 362. Assets at a treaty with several tribes of Indians ar Easton, iii. 161

Handel, George Frederick, his death, iii. 95

Hanover, taken by the French, ii. 104, 109. The administration of it changed by them, 310. The duke of Randan's generous and humane conduct there, 322. It is abandoned by the French, 323. Who enter the dominions of it again, 335. iii. 228. And evacuate them, 238, 242. Complaints of its army violating the newstrality of the Dutch territories, 271. Its territories repossessed by the French, iv. 47, 270, 275, 277

Hanoverian forces brought into England, i. 312. Sent back to their own country, 410

Harcourt, earl, fent to demand the princess of Strelitz, iv.

Hardwicke, lord, frames the marriage-act, i. 146. Created an earl, 193

Hardy, Sir Charles, returns from Cape Breton, ii. 294.

Driven with admiral Hawke, by bad weather, into Torbay, iii. 114. His operations in the bay of Basque, iv. 250

Harland, captain, sent to burn two ships off Toulon, iii.

Harleian collection of manuscripts purchased by parliament,
i. 153

Harley, lord (Oxford's fon) his motion concerning the Jews,

Harman, captain, his operations at Guadaloupe, iii. 456
Harper, Janet, her great age, iii. 96

Harrache, general, commands a body of Austrians in Silesia, ii. 349. Forms the siege of Neiss, 360. Which he is obliged to abandon, 366

Harrison, captain, assists in taking the Arethusa, iii. 102. And a French East India ship, iv. 237

Hartington, marquis of (Devonshire's son) his government of Ireland, i. 300. See Devenshire

Harvey, major, fent to fummon Niagara, iii. 179

Haviland, colonel, detached against Isle au Noix, iii. 422. Affists in the reduction of Montreal, 427, 439. And Martinique, iv. 364

Haure de Grace, bombarded by admiral Rodney, iv. 13 Hauke, Sir Edward, sent on a cruize, i. 250, 280. And to supersede admiral Byng, 322. He sails to Minorca, 335. His operations in the Mediterranean, 337. And expedition against Rochesort, ii. 9. He sails for the bay of Biscay, 241. Distresses the French marine in Basque road, and at the isle of Rhée, 242. Sails with lord Anson to the bay of Biscay, 246. Blocks up the harbour of Brest, iii. 112, 113. He is driven by stress of weather into Torbay, 114. From whence he sails, and falls in with De la Clue's squadron, ib. Over which he obtains a complete plete victory, 116. He is gratified with a penfion, and his merit approved by the parliament, 120. His operations in the bay of Quiberon, iv. 12, 250

Haroley, general, his character, and remarkable will, iii.

Hay, lord Charles, fails for America, ii. 30

-, Dr. appointed a lord of the admiralty, ii. 8

Heathcote, alderman, vindication of his conduct, iii. 441

Hendrik, an Indian chief, killed, i. 267

Henley, lord, opposes a ministerial motion concerning the Westminster election, i. 102. Appointed lord-keeper, ii. 7. High-steward at the trial of earl Ferrers, iii. 376. Administers the oaths to the peers, iv. 146. Constituted

lord high chancellor, 222

Henry, prince of Prussia, his bravery at the battle of Prague, ii. 79. And Kolin, 91. Brings off the rear of the Prussians from Leitmeritz, 124. Is wounded at Rosbach, 150. Gets the command of a separate army, 339. Is in danger of being surrounded, 353. Until reinforced by his brother, 354. He penetrates into Bohemia, iii. 243. Enters Franconia, and obliges the Imperial army to retire, 244. Makes a forced march, and surprizes general Vehla, 257. Relieves Breslau, iv. 65. Remains in the neighbourhood of marechal Daun, 281. Detaches parties against the Swedes and Imperialists, 283. Defeats an attempt of count Daun upon his camp at Meissen, 288

Hensey, Dr. Florence, convicted of treason, ii. 406. Pardoned, 408

Hernbutters, their tenets, iv. 122

Heros French man of war destroyed, iii. 118

Herring fishery erected, i. 70. Laws for the improvement of, 444

Hertfordibire, riots in, ii. 33

Hervey, caprain, reinforces admiral Byng, i. 318. Destroys a French thip in Malta, ii. 266

Hesse-Cassel, William, landgrave of, precautions taken by him on his son's turning Roman-catholic, i. 231. He sends a body of his troops into England, 312. His advantageous treaty with Britain, 377. His territories taken possession of by the French, ii. 109. The Swedish answer to his memorial, 164. Decree of the Aulic council against him, 169. Plan of a treaty proposed by him to France. Numb. XL.

312. Remarks on that plan and his conduct, 314. His intended defection prevented by a new turn of affairs, ib. His territories evacuated by the French, 324. Who reinvade them, 329. He gets a large sum, besides his subsidy, from Britain, to facilitate his return to his dominions, iii. 5. His capital taken by the French, 228. And evacuated, 238. Arret of the Evangelical body at Ratisbon in his favour, with the emperor's answer, 263. His death, iv. 28

Hesse-Cassel, Frederick succeeds to the landgraviate of, iv. 28. Exactions in his territories by the French, 34. His capital possessed by them, 46, 49, 58, 269. His open country secured by the hereditary prince of Brunswick, 277

Hessian troops brought into England, i. 312. Bill for quartering them, 438

Hexham, dangerous commotion at, iv. 217

Highlanders, their bravery and loss at Tronderoga, ii. 289, A detachment of them sent to the West-Indies, iii. 130, 448. They assist in taking Guadaloupe, 144, 148. Sent to North America, 160. Some of their seats at Quebec, 179, 185, 186, 187, 190, 415, 416. La Galette, 423. Eybach, iv. 33. Warbourg, 44. At Zierenberg, 48. They assist in forcing the posts at Cappenhagen, 279. And contribute to the reduction of Martinique, 366 Highways. See Wheels

Hill, major, fignalizes himfelf at Corbach, iv. 41

Hillsborough (Hill) earl of, appointed comptroller of the houshold, i. 193

Hodges, Mr. concerts the reduction of Milie, iv. 244

Hodgson, general, and account of his reduction of Belleisle, iv. 254

Hog's lard, and greafe, allowed to be imported from Ireland, iv. 202

Holbourne, admiral, sent with a squadron to North America, i. 244. ii. 30. Arrives at Halisax, 36. Makes two trips to Louisbourg, 44. Where his steet suffers greatly by a hurricane, 45. He returns to England, ib Holderneffe (D'Arcy) earl of, continued secretary of state, i.

h

H

193. Refigns, iv. 222

Holmes, admiral, his engagement with a French squadron, i. 363. He compels the French to evacuate Embden, ii. 241. Sails to Cape Breton, iii. 180. His operations against against Quebec, 181, 183, 185, 192. Thanked by the house of commons, 198. His conduct and success at

Jamaica, iv. 8, 248

Holstein-Beck, Frederick, prince of, killed at Prague, ii. 80—Gottorp, George, prince of, his activity at Norkitten, ii. 136. He is fent to harrass the Russians, 137. Dispatched to the relief of Prussian Pomerania, 163. Reinforces the allied army, 321. His station at the battle of Crevelt, 236. Dislodges a body of French from Freyinstenau, iii. 225. His behaviour at Minden approved, 234. He repulses M. de St. Germain at Ersdorf, iv. 33

Holwell, Mr. his defence of Calcutta, and cruel usage there,

i. 364, 369

Hood, captain, takes the Bellona, iii. 98. The Warwick, and a privateer, iv. 235

Hopson, general, sent to North America, ii. 30. And to the West Indies, iii. 129. His operations at Martinique, 132, 448. And at Gaudaloupe, 136, 448. Where he dies, 144

Horn, count, worsts the French at Eglen, ii. 143

Horne, William Andrew, detection of a murder committed by him, iii. 352

Hotham, captain, his fuccess, iii. 99

Houses, additional tax on, ii. 194. iv. 348

Howard, general, his motions at Kirch-Denckern, iv. 273

Howe, lord, his death and character, ii. 287

---, lord, his engagement with part of a French squadron, i. 248. Sent in pursuit of a French man of war, ii. 11. Reduces the isle of Aix, 13. Conducts the marine armament sent against St. Malo, 246. Cherbourg, 252. And to the neighbourhood of St. Malo, 255. He patronizes Mr. Irwin in scheme for finding the longitude, iii. 88. His operations in the bay of Quiberon, iv. 12

-, colonel, his operations at Quebec, iii. 185, 187, 183,

Hudson's bay, attempt to open the commerce to, i. 31

Hughes, captain, his fucces, iii. 101. Sails with a squadron to reinforce commodore Moore, 129. Returns to England, 160

Hughly, reduced by admiral Watson and colonel Clive, ii.

47

Huguely, in the East Indies, described, i. 204
Hulsen, general, his operations in Bohemia, iii. 244. He marches with count Dohna into Poland, 247. He engages part of the Imperial army, iv. 74. Abandons Berlin, 77. Joins the king's army, 91

Hume, captain James, killed in a naval engagement, ii.

244

Hungary, queen of, opposition in the British parliament to her demand of arrears i. 17. Her internal conduct, 52. Her declaration concerning the disputes between Russia and Sweden, 81. Proposal for electing her eldest son king of the Romans, 82, 111, 133. She supports the elector of Hanover's pretentions to East Friefland, ib. Treaty between her and the duke of Modena, 163. She listens to the French propofals, 276. Refuses auxiliaries to England, 285. Treaty between her, France, and Ruffia, 377. She endeavours to frustrate the king of Prussia's deligns, 380. Her answers to that prince's demands, 381. 382. Her kingdom of Bohemia invaded by his troops, 389. Her army fights the Prusiians at Lowoschutz, 390. She demands from Britain and Holland their stipulated fuccours, 398. Two armies fent to her affistance by the king of France, ii. 58. One of which seizes several places belonging to Pruffia for her use, 69. The Czarina fends an army, and equips a fleet, for her affistance, 62. Skirmishes between her troops and the Prussians on the frontiers of Bohemia, 66. Her answer to the British proposals, 71. Her kingdom of Bohemia is a second time invaded by the king of Prussia, 73. Her troops defeated at Reichenberg, 74. And near Prague, 76. But rout the Pruffians at Kolin, 89. She recalls her minister from London, and orders the British ministers to quit her dominions, 129. She cuts off the communication between Oftend, &c. and England, ib. Her reasons for so doing, 130. She admits French garrifons into Oftend and Nieuport, 131. Threatens Hamburgh, ib. Receives the revenues of Cleves and Marcke, ib. Her forces defeat the Prussians at Goerlitz, 141. And lay Berlin under contribution, 144. They rout the Pruffians near Breffau, and take some places in Silesia, 152, 153. Her kingdom of Bohemia laid under contribution, 155. Her army is defeated at Lissa, 157. She loses Silesia, 161. Dismisses the Hanoverian minister, 179. Her dominions af of Bohemia, Glatz, and Moravia, invaded by the Prussians, 338, 339. Her troops force the king of Prussia to abandon the fiege of Olmutz, 341. They furprize and defeat him at Hochkirchen, 355. Her rescript to the feveral courts of the Empire, 376. The elector of Hanover's memorial to the Imperial diet with respect to his fervices to her, 377. The title of Apostolical queen conferred upon her by pope Benedict XIV. 385. king of Prussia's justifying proofs against her, &c. 435. With her answer to them, 468. Skirmishes between her troops and the allies, iii. 224, 243. Her dominions of Bohemia invaded by prince Henry of Prussia, 243. Altercations between her and the king of Prussia, 246. Part of her army re-inforces the Russians before the battle of Cunersdorf, 250. Her troops worsted at Corbitz. Hoyerswerda, and Pretsch, 257, 258. They surround and take the Prussian army under general Finck, 259. And that under general Diercke, 260. Her answer to the English and Prussian memorial concerning a congress, iv. 31. Advantages gained by her forces over the Prusfians in Saxony, 59. They defeat an army of Pruffians at Landshut, and reduce Glatz, 62. Are worsted at Lignitz, 70. And under general Beck, 73. They take possession of Berlin, 78. Account of their enormities there, 79. With an answer thereto, 89. Her army defeated at Torgau, 92. Her grand armies remain inactive in Saxony and Silesia, 280. Skirmishes between parties of them and the Prussians, 282

Hunger, a deplorable instance of, at sea, iii. 96

Hunter, Thomas Orby, appointed a lord of the admiralty, Hutchinsonians, their principles, iv. 122

13

i.

0

.

a

r

y

S

Ô

9

d

Ŝ

n

-

s, at ne n

n d ne

1-u, m y

ns

Huzzen, captain, his station at Qubec, iii. 415

J.

JAHNUS, baron, takes several places in Silesia from the Prussians, ii. 132. Is driven by M. De la Mothe Fouquet out of Glatz, 338. Intercepts the convoy designed for the Prussian army before Olmutz, 341

Jamaica, deliberations concerning the sugar trade of, i. 149. Inquiry into admiral Knowles's management there, 464. Insurrection of the negroes there, iv. 5. Regulations in that island, 7

James-fort, in Africa, an unsuccessful attempt against by the French, iv. 250

Jamonwille, Mr. put to death, i. 227

Jansemism, disturbances in France on account of, i. 51, 129, 159, 231, 352, 408. ii. 387

Jefferies, lieutenant-colonel, his gallantry in defence of St.

Philip's fort, i. 332

Jekyl, captain, his operations at Guadaloupe, iii. 138, 452 Jennings, colonel, his behaviour at Carrickfergus, iii. 392. For which he is thanked by the Irish house of commons, 395

Jesuits, their estates in Portugal sequestered, for a conspiracy against the king, ii. 386. iii. 277. iv. 21. Their army routed in Paraguay, iv. 22. Proposals of their chief at Pondicherry, 107. Proceedings against them in France, 266

Jews, an all for the naturalization of them passed, i. 142. Repealed, 184. Motion for repealing a former act in favour of them, 188

Imhoff, general, defeats M. de Chevert, at Meer, ii. 333. Retakes Munster, iii. 239

Imperialists. See Empire

Imprisonment of debtors, when authorized, iii. 56. See Debtors Insolvent act, reflections on the compulsive clause in, iv. 204, 346

Invincible man of war loft, ii. 240

John V. king of Portugal, his death and character, i. 87 Johnson, Sir William, undertakes an expedition against Crown Point, i. 263. Encamps at Lake George, 264. Where he is attacked by the French, 265. And intirely defeats them, 266. He retreats, 269. Rewards bestowed upon him, ib. His deputy assists in effecting an alliance with the Indians, iii. 161. Of whom he assembles a considerable number, 170, 180. He defeats the French near Niagara, and reduces that fortress, 178. Remarks on his conduct, 179. He assists in the reduction of Montreal, 423, 439. Concludes a new treaty with divers Indian tribes, iv. 247

, Mr. murdered, iii, 371

Joseph, king of Portugal, his accession, i. 87. Some account of his internal conduct, 129, 233. His restrictions on the British commerce, 233. A dreadful earthquake at his capital, 293. Attempt against his life, 384. The neutrality of his coasts violated by the English, iii. 107. Detection and punishment of the conspirators against him, 277. Misunderstanding between him and the pope, iv. 21. Receives satisfaction for the insult to his neutrality, 22. His daughter married to his brother, ib

Joseph, archduke, scheme for electing him king of the Romans, i. 82, 111, 133

Irby, Sir William, created lord Boston, iv. 224

Ireland, disputes in, concerning prerogative and privilege, i. 195. Which are composed, 300. It is threatened with a French invasion, iii. 113, 121. Loyalty of the Catholics there, 123. Dangerous insurrections on an apprehension of an union with Britain, 125. Invasion there by M. Thurot, 392

Irish wool, and woollen yarn, allowed to be imported to England, i. 124, 141, Steps taken with respect to the importation of tallow and live cattle, ii. 211, 213. Salted beef, pork, and butter, allowed to be imported, 215, iii. 24, 313. And cattle and tallow, 37. Remarkable adventure of five mariners, 396. Importation of beef, pork, and butter, further continued, iv. 200. And hogs lard and grease permitted to be imported, 205

Iron, proceedings on the bill for encouraging the importation of, from North America, i. 67, 446 or, nom reormanica, a

Iroquois. See Five Nations

Irwin, Mr. his scheme for finding the longitude at sea, ill.

87

Judges, reflection on the grant for the augmentation of their falaries, ii. 199. Funds allotted for that purpose, iii. 12. Proceedings on the bill for augmenting their salaries, 48. Act in their savour, iv. 209

Jufte French man of war loft, iii. 118

Juflices of the peace, reflections on, i. 122, 141, 297, 439, 443.

An act concerning them, iv. 206

Justifying proofs published by authority at Berlin, i. 400—406. ii. 435—467. Remarks on them, i. 406—408. Answers to them by the court of Vienna, 468—478

K.

KEENE, Sir Benjamin, his negotiation at Madrid, i. 850

1 233. His memorial there, 284

Keith, veldt-marechal, conducts the Prussian army into Bo. hemia, i. 389. His gallantry at the battle of Lowoschutz, 301. He accompanies the king of Prussia a second time into Bohemia, ii. 73. Invests Prague, 80. Opposes the king of Prussia's attacking count Daun at Kolin, 88. Brings off the rear of the Prussians after that action, 92. Encamps at Leitmeritz, 123. Accompanies the king to Erfurth, 140. Left commander at Leipzig, 146. Detached into Saxony and Bohemia, 155. Conducts the first column of the Prussians into Moravia, 339. Appointed to superintend the siege of Olmutz, ib. He brings off the artillery from Olmutz, 342. Puts to flight an incommoding Austrian party on the hills of Hollitz, 343. Sustains the Austrians chief attack at Hochkirchen, 356. A particular account of his behaviour and death there, 357

, major, fignalizes himself at Eybach, iv. 33

____, Mr. ordered to quit Vienna, ii. 129

Kempenfelt, captain, brings a reinforcement to the garrison of Madrass, iii. 203

Kennedy, captain, his bravery, iii. 394

Kent, riots in, ii. 33

Keppel, commodore, fent to demand satissaction of the Algerines, i. 54. Assists in concluding a treaty with Tripoli and Tunis, 128. Detached in pursuit of a French man of war, ii. 11. Takes Goree, 294. Reinforces Senegal, 297. Commands the naval armament sent against Belleisle, iv. 254

Kerfin, M. de, his engagement with three British men of war, ii. 234. His attempt on Cape-coast-castle, 236

Kilby, Christopher, his contract for the forces in North America, approved of by the commons, i. 464

Kildare (Fitzgerald) earl of, created marquis, iv. 223
King, Dr. closes the ceremony of the installation of King, Dr. closes the ceremony of the installation of the earl of Westmoreland, at Oxford, with an elegant ofation, iii. 95

, captain, reinforced in Ofwego, i, 272

King.

King, Mrs. murdered by Gardelle, iv. 91

Kingley, general, appointed to conduct the grenadiers in case of their landing near fort Fouras, ii. 15. His bravery at Minden, iii. 234, 235

Kingflon, in Jamaica, contentions concerning it and Spanishtown, i. 465

Kinnoul (Hay) earl of, fent ambassador to Portugal, iv.

Kirkpatrick, captain, his proceedings in the East Indies, i. 208

Knight, captain, his success, iii. 102

Knollis, lieutenant, his bravery and death, iii. 396

Knowles, admiral, his trial for missehaviour, and sentence, i. 414. Inquiry into his conduct as governor of Jamaica, 464. He is detached to take the isle of Aix, ii. 11. Retards the attack by sending two ships to give chace to a French man of war, ib. He is intrusted with the demolition of the works at Aix, 14. He objects against attempting fort Fouras, 15, 26. A piece of fortification planned by, destroyed, 283

Konigfeg, count, defeated at Reichenberg, ii. 74

L.

LA Corne, M. his proceedings in North America, i. 179,

Lacy, general, conducts an Austrian army into Brandenburg, iv. 77. And takes possession of Berlin, 78

Laforey, captain, his bravery at Louisbourg, ii. 283.

Lally, general, arrives in the East Indies, ii. 300. Takes fort St. David, 302. And Cudalore, 304. He miscarries in an attempt upon the king of Tanjour's capital, ib. Marches into Arcot, 305. Commences the siege of Madrass, iii. 200. Which he is forced to relinquish, 203. His letter to M. de Legret, ib. He makes an unsuccessful attempt on Conjiveram, 206. Retires with M. D'Aché to the island of Mauritius, 210. Takes Syringham, 217. Recovers Conjiveram, but is obliged to abandon it, 218. He is routed by colonel Coote at Wandewash, ib. Retreats to Pondicherry, 220. His proposals for the delivery of that garrison, iv. 104. With colonel Coote's answers to them, 106. His letter to M. Raymond, 109

No. 40.

Lancasbire, tumult in, ii. 406

Langdon, captain, his bravery, ii. 234

Lasci, general, incommodes the Prussians in their retreat from Olmutz, ii. 343

Latham, captain, receives the keys of Chandenagore, il,

Latton, Mr. his cruel treatment in Morocco, i. 55

Laudobn, general, defeats a party of Prussians, and joins the combined army of French and Imperialists, ii. 144. Harasses the king of Prussia in his retreat from Olmutz, 343. Advances to the frontiers of Brandenburgh, 354. Incommodes the rear of the Prussians, 360. Skirmish between his army and the Prussians, iii. 250. He is detached with a reinforcement to the Russians, ib. Which contributes much to the victory at Cunersdorf, 253. He defeats general Fouquet, and reduces Glatz, iv. 62. Undertakes the siege of Breslau, 63. Which he is obliged to abandon, 65. Is defeated by the king of Prussia, 70. Maintains his ground in Silesia, 91, 281. He effects a junction with the Russians, 285. Of which the greater part leave him, ib. He surprizes Schweidnitz, 286

Laurence, general, defeats the French neutrals, i. 180. Af-

fifts in the reduction of Cape Breton, ii. 281

Ali Khan, i. 206. Takes upon him the command of the East India company's troops, 209. Relieves Tiruchirapaili, 210. Obtains several advantages over the French, 363. His gallant defence of Madrass, iii.

Law, Mr. defeated and taken, iv. 245 Learning, persons eminent for, iv. 120

Lee, Dr. his character, i. 9. He opposes the court measures in the Westminster election, 102

Leeds, riot at, i. 159

Leeward-islands. See West-Indies

Legge, honourable Henry, appointed chancellor of the exchequer, i. 193. He opposes a clause in favour of Hanover, 290. Is divested of his office, ib. To which he is restored, ii. 1. He is commanded to resign, 5. Receives honourable testimonies of the people's approbation. 6. Replaced in the offices of chancellor of the exchequer, and commissioner of the treasury, 7. In which he is continued, but soon resigns them, iv. 222

Legibelli,

Legibelli, a Moorish king of, some account of, ii. 271, 273, 277, 297

Le -, Mr. his case, i. 190

Lebwald, marechal, his declaration on the Russians advancing against Prussia, ii. 133. His engagement with M. Apraxin at Norkitten, 136. He forces the Swedes to retire from the Prussian territories, 163

Leigh, Mr. high bailiff, his proceedings at the Westminster election, i. 76, 101

Leipzig taken possession of by prince Ferdinand, i. 386. It is subjected to military execution by the Prussians, ii. 145. Siege of, undertaken in vain by the army of France and the Empire, 146. Subjected again to military execution, 309. Invested by the prince of Deux-ponts, 361. The siege of it raised, 367. It is grievously opressed by the king of Prussia, 369. Reduced by the army of the Empire, iii. 256. Retaken by the Prussians, ib. Recovered by Imperialists and Austrians, iv. 91. Possessed by the Prussians, 95

Leland, major, affifts in taking Martinique, iv. 366

Lendrick, captain, his success, iii. 98, 101

Lestie, captain, assists in the reduction of Guadaloupe, iii.

Levant. See Turky

Levi, chevalier de, undertakes the siege of Quebec, iii. 413. Worsts general Murray there, 415. But is obliged by him to abandon the fiege with precipitation, 419

Leavis XV. king of France, censured for the arrest of the young chevalier, i. 48. He mediates a reconciliation between Sweden and Russia, 50. Internal measures of his ministry, 51. His disputes with his parliaments concerning the bull Unigenitus, 51, 129, 159, 252, 408. ii, 387. He engages in a defensive alliance with Spain, Sardinia, &c. i. 53. Interferes in the disputes between Russia and Sweden, 81. His declaration concerning the proposed election of the archduke to be king of the Romans, 84, 116. Ambitious schemes of his subjects in North-America, 173. Their perfidious practices in Nova Scotia, 179, 228. He recalls the parliament of Paris from exile, 232. Conduct of his minister at London, 243. Rupture between him and England, 249. The trade of his fubjects greatly distressed by the English, 251. Fruitless intrigues of his ministers in Spain, 276, 284. Their practices Iiz practices in Germany, ib. His declaration at the court of Vienna, 283. He refrains from open hostilities, 286. State of his navy, 287. An act concerning British subjects in his service, 300. His minister's letter to Mr. Fox, 304. And answer thereto, 305. He threatens Britain with an invasion, 307. Mutual declarations of war between him and England, 342, 345. Close connexion between him and the two Empresses, 377. His minister's declaration at Berlin, 379. And to the diet of the Empire, 397. He orders the Prussian minister to leave Verfailles, on the Dauphines's miscarriage, occasioned by his master's treatment of her parents, 398. He holds a bed of justice, 409. An attempt by Damien to affassinate him, ii. 54. Change in his ministry, 57. Several parts of his kingdom desolated by the melting of snow, 58. He fends two armies into Germany, ib. His minister ordered by the king of Prussia to quit Dresden, 65. His generals take possession of Hanover, 104, 109. His troops admitted into Oftend and Nieuport, 131. He menaces Hamburgh, ib. His minister's memorial to the Dutch concerning the English cruizers, 269. His views in the German war, 306. He changes the administration of Hanover, 310. Plan of a treaty proposed to him by the landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, 312. His treaty with the duke of Brunswick Wolfenbuttle, 315. His memorial called the parallel, 319, Answer to it, ib. 381. His troops retreat to the Rhine, 324. They re-enter the the territories of Hanover, 335. Measures taken by his ministry for the support of public credit and trade, to carry on the continental war, to reinforce his American colonies, and to alarm England with an invasion, 388. Preparations made for that purpose, iii. 109. And to invade Ireland, 113. His prisoners in England supplied with clothing by private contributions, 199. His ministers stop payment, 265. His envoy's memorial to the Dutch in answer to the British ambassador's, 270. Captures by his and the British cruisers, 389. His answer to the British and Prussian memorial, iv. 31. List of his ships of war taken, destroyed, or casually lost, fince the commencement of the war till about the middle of the year 1760, 138. His declaration to the court of Stockholm, 265. He pacifies the fultan's resentment against Malta, 290. Account of the negotiation for peace between tween him and England, 291. With reflections on it, 300. Private treaty between him and Spain, 359

Lewis, major, advances against the Indians, iii. 409

Licences to public houses, proceedings relative to, i. 121, 141,

Licences to public houses, proceedings relative to, i. 121, 141, 421, 442, 443. ii. 195

Lichtenstein, prince, routed at Cohlin, ii. 74. His conduct at Kolin applauded by the king of Prussia, 91

Lignitz taken by the Austrians, ii. 144

Ligonier, lord, continued commander in chief, iv. 224 behaviour at Minden, iii. 234

Lincolnshire, riots in, ii. 33

Lindsay, captain, mortally wounded near Cherbourg, i.

Litchfield, tumult at, i. 37

Lockbart, captain, his fuccess, ii. 31, 183

Logie, captain, assists in defeating M. Thurot's squadron, iii. 394. Honours conferred on him for that exploit, 395. Remarkable engagement by him, 238

Logs-town on the Ohio furprised, i. 226

London, two earthquakes at, i. 77. Pestilential sever at the sessions-house of, 80. Its address to George II. on the critical situation of affairs, 348. Grants bounties to volunteers, iii. 74. Its resolutions for building a bridge at Blackfriars, 86. A conflagration at, ib. Remarks on its building, 87. Its address on taking Quebec, 197. And petition concerning the excessive use of spirituous liquors, 307. Bill for smproving its streets, 323. And for supplying it with sish, 326. A fire in its neighbourhood at Covent-garden, 354. Proceedings of the lord-mayor, &c. concerning the bridge at Blackfriars, 387. Address of the common-council of, to Mr. Pitt, iv. 334. With restections on their conduct, 335

London-bridge, act for repairing of, ii. 208. iii. 462. The temporary part of it burnt, ii. 405. Further sum granted towards improving it, iii. 5, 290. iv. 188

Longewity, instances of, iii. 96

Long-island in New York described, i. 216 Longitude, scheme for finding it at sea, iii. 87

Longprie, M. his defence and surrender of the island of Dominique, iv. 249

Loring, captain, his transactions on lake Champlain, iii. 175. And lake Ontario, 423

Loudon,

Loudon (Campbell) earl of, appointed commander in chief in North America, i. 342. State of affairs at his arrival at New-York, 357. He concerts measures for the enfuing campaign, 361. Which are obstructed by dissentions among the colonies, ib. ii. 34. Sets out for Halifax, 36. Obliged to postpone his designs against Louisbourg, 37. Remarks on his conduct, 232. He returns to England, 279

Louisbourg, surrender of, ii. 283. Its fortifications demolished, iv. I

Lovat, lord, an act for payment of the debts on his estate,

iv. 193

Luckner, general, defeats a French detachment under count Muret, iv. 32. Another at Eybach, 33. Raises contributions in Fulda, 36. His exploit at Butzbatch, 38. He repulses some French detachments at Eimbeck, Nordheim, and Norten, 47, 50. His other operations, 267, 271, 276, 278

Lyman, general, his operations in America, i. 263, 264.

Lyme ship of war foundered, iv. 14

Lynar, count de, mediates, by the king of Denmark's orders, the convention of Closter-Seven, ii. 111. He seconds the remonstrances of the French general on the breach of that treaty, 177

Lys French man of war taken, i. 429

Lyttleton, Sir George, opposes the motion for the sea-officers being heard by counsel, i. 20. And that for reducing the number of the land forces, 93. Supports the general naturalization-bill, 98. Appointed cofferer of the household, 193. Chancellor of the exchequer, and a lord of the treasury, 292

, colonel, supports the court interest in the Westminster election, i. 102.

M.

MACBEAN, captain, contributes to the victory at Minden, iii. 234, 235

Mac-Cartie, commodore, defeated and taken, iv. 9

Macdonald, captain, his humanity and bravery, iii. 179

—————, captain Donald, commands a corps at the battle of Quebec, iii. 415

Mec-

M

41

Mac-Gennis, captain, his bravery and death, i. 268

Macguire, M. takes Gabel, ii. 424. Attacked at Asch, iii.

244. His gallant defence of Dresden, iv. 66

Machault, M. removed from his office in the French miniftry, ii. 57

Mackenzie, colonel, affists in taking Belleisle, iv. 256

-, Katherine, her great age, iii. 96

Macnamara, admiral, escorts the French fleet from Breft, i. 244

Madder, act for encouraging the growth of, ii. 216

Madrass, in the East-Indies, described, i. 202. Besieged by general Lally, iii. 200

Magdalen-hospital, the institution of, ii. 410

Maitland, captain, his gallantry in an engagement off Hifpaniola, iv. o

-, captain Richard, defeats a body of Sipoys, and reduces Surat, iii. 205

Malabar coast described, i. 199

Male, lieutenant, his feasonable resolution, iv. 243

Malt, an additional tax on, iii. 297, 303. See Distillation, Corn

Malta, complaints about the violation of its neutrality by the English, ii. 266. A Turkish ship carried thither, iv. 23. Accommodation between it and the Ottoman Porte, 290

Manchester, riots at, i. 159. ii. 406

Mansfield, lord. See Murray

Manteuffel, general, his progress against the Swedes, iii. 242, 243. By whom he is defeated and taken, iv. 59

Marigalante submits to general Barrington, iii. 158

Marine society formed, i. 341

15

n-

ttle

lac-

Marines, acts passed for the better regulation of, on shore, i. 242, 439

Marischal (Keith) earl of, letter to him from the king of Prussia, ii. 91. Two acts in his favour, iii. 349. iv.

Maritime laws of England extended to America, i. 330

Mark, county of, seized by the French for the empressqueen, ii. 68, 131

Marlborough (Spencer) duke of, his motion concerning the constitutional queries, i. 100. He is appointed one of the commissioners to enquire into the miscarriage against Rochefort, ii. 19. Account of his expedition against St. Malo, 246. He is appointed to the command of the British troops in Germany, 251. Joins the allied army, 334. Dies at Munster, 337. An account of the transaction between him and Mr. Barnard, 415

Marlborough-fort, in the East Indies, taken by the French, iv.

244

Marriage-act, an account of, i. 145

Marsh, captain, commands the squadron sent against Senegal, ii. 273

Marsbal, lieutenant, his bravery and death, ii. 299

Martin, captain, wounded, ii. 303

Martinique, island, a fort of, destroyed by two British men of war, ii. 298. The state of it. iii. 127. And description, 130, 135, 450. An account of the descents upon it by commodore Moore, general Hopson, and general Barrington, 130, 447. iv. 371. New armament sent against it, iv. 336. General description of it, 363. It is reduced, 364. The advantages of that conquest, 370

Maryland described, i. 221

Maskelyne, Mr. Nevil, sent to observe the transit of Venus, iv. 16

Mason, Mr. Charles, sent to observe the transit of Venus, iv. 16

major, commander of the marines in the expedition against Senegal, ii. 273

Massachuset's bay described, i. 215

Massey, colonel, assists in defeating the French at Niagara, iii. 178

Massulpatam in the East-Indies described, i. 203 Matthews, Mr. murdered by Stirn, iii. 384

Maxwell, colonel, bravery of his battalion at Warbourg, iv.

44. At Zierenberg, 48

Measures and weights, an inquiry about, ii. 229, iil. 64, 348

Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Frederick, duke of, joins in the confederacy against Prussia, ii. 62. His dominions laid under contribution by the Prussians, 164, 308. His remonstrance to the diet at Ratisbon, iv. 97 of his family and dominions, ib.

Melampe, French ship of war, taken, ii. 183

Melcomb-Regis, George Doddington, created baron of, iv.

Melville, major, ashists in taking Guadalupe, Hi. 142. Appointed pointed governor of the citadel at Baffe-terre, 145, 160. His bravery in the reduction of Dominique, iv. 249

Memel taken by the Ruffians, ii. 119

Meniz, John Frederick, elector of, concludes a subsidiary treaty with England, i. 82. His letter to the king of Prussia concerning the election of a king of the Romans, 113. His minister rejects the king of Prussia's letter to the Imperial diet, 408

Mercer, colonel, left commander at Oswego, i. 275. Killed

there, 360

Methodists, some account of, iv. 121

Meyer, colonel, destroys the Austrian magazine at Pilsen, ii. 80

Michie, captain Colin, killed, iii. 209 Mignonne, French frigate, taken, iii. 99

Mibie, French settlement, reduced, iv. 244

Milford-haven, resolutions concerning, i. 468. Acts in favour of, ii. 201, iii. 6, 38. Law concerning the exportation of culm from it, 342

Militia bill, proceedings on, i. 302, 429. Riots on account of it, ii. 33. Act for explaining it, 205. New laws relating to it, iii. 29. Rivals the ftanding army in military accomplishments, 74. Bill for quickening the execution of the laws concerning it, 314. Attempt to establish one in Scotland, ib. Further regulations relating to that in England, 317. With resections, 320. More regulations concerning it, iv. 216. And more tumults, 217

Millar, captain, affifts in taking Senegal, ii. 275
—, lieutenant, his bravery and fuccess, iv. 10

Milne, enfign, his precautions for the fafety of fort Prince

George, iii. 402

Minden taken by the French, ii. 103. Retaken by the Hanoverians, 323. Repossessed by the French, iii. 229. Surrendered to the allies, 235

Minorca, preparations against, by the French, and neglect of, by the ministry, i. 313. Account of the reduction of it, 325. Inquiry into the loss of it, 457

Minisinks, their treaty with the British colonies, iii. 161 Mirepoix, duke de, his embarrassment in his embassy at London, i. 243. His declaration to the British ministry, 245. He is recalled, 249. And sets out for Paris without taking leave, 280. His proposals at the court of London, 342

Modena, Francis III. duke of, extraordinary treaty between him and the court of Vienna, i. 163

No. 40.
K k

Modeste,

Modefie, French man of war, taken, iii. 108

Mohair. See Silk, and Turky Trade

Mobicons, their treaty with the British colonies, iii. 161

Mobok, Indians, their habitation, i. 218. Treaty between the English governors and them, iii. 161

Monckion, general, sent with a detachment to Nova Scoia, i. 252. His operations there, 253. Appointed to serve under general Wolfe against Quebec, iii. 181. Dislodges a body of the enemy from the point of Levi, 186. His operations at the attack of the intrenchment at Montmorenci, 190. Forms a plan for landing the troops near the heights of Abraham, 184. And affists in the execution of it, 185. Conducts the right at the battle of Quebec, 188. Where he is dangerously wounded, 190. He receives the thanks of the house of commons, 198, Goes to New York, 200. He reduces Martinique, iv. 364

Monro, colonel, surrenders fort William-Henry, ii. 39.

—, major, reduces Mihie in the East Indies, iv. 244

Monson, major, takes Carical, iv. 11

Montague, captain, destroys the Oriflamme, ii. 242

Montcalm, marquis de, reduces Oswego, i. 359. His proceedings in confequence thereof, ii. 35. He makes an unsuccessful attempt upon fort William-Henry, 38. Defeats colonel Parker at Ticonderoga, ib. Reduces fort William-Henry, 39. His precautions for the desence of Quebec, iii. 171, 177, 185, 186, 187. Repels general Wolfe at Montmorenci, 190. Is deseated and slain at the battle of Quebec, 188, 191

Montgomery, colonel, destroys the Cherokees towns and villages, iii. 404. His expedition to the middle settlements,

106

Montreal, capitulation of, iii. 425

Moore, commodore, commands at the Leeward islands, iii.
103. Where he is reinforced by a squadron under captain Hughes, 129. An account of his attempt on Martinique, 129. And of his operations at Guadaloupe, 136. He fails to Antigua, 160. His account of the expeditions to Martinique, &c. 447. With general Barrington's remarks, iv. 372

Moravians, their tenets, iv. 122

Mordaunt, Sir John, appointed commander of the land forces fent against Rochesort, ii. 9. His orders, 12. Enquiry into his conduct, 19. His trial, 29. He is acquitted, ib. But difinissed the service, 30. Address of the commons concerning him, 225

Morison, capiain, killed, iii. 406

Morocco, scandalous treatment of the English ambassador there, i. 55. And of captain Barton and his crew of the Litchfield man of war, ii. 297

Morris, Robert Hunter, his petition concerning making falt

in America, ii. 228

Mostyn, general, his activity at Warbourg, iv. 45

Mountstuart of Wortley, Mary countess of Bute created baroness of, iv. 224

Munster, disputes between, and Hanover, i. 163. Seized by the French, iii. 229. Retaken by the allies, 239

Murder, an act for the prevention of, i. 127

Murders, an account of several, i. 108. iii. 77, 352, 371, 384. iv. 16, 219

Murray, lieutenant colonel, killed at Wandewash, iii. 220
Murray, lord John, his regiment suffers much at Ticonderoga, ii. 289. A detachment of it sent to the West-Indies, iii. 130, 448. They assist in taking Guadaloupe, 144, 148. Sent to North America, 160 extending the military laws to the East-India company's fettlements, 190. Created attorney-general, 193. Lord Mansfield, lord chief justice of the king's bench, and temporary chancellor of the exchequer, ii. 5. Continued in the office of lord chief justice, iv. 222 eession at his releasement from Newgate, 107. Animosity of the commons towards him, 118. Proceedings upon a pamphlet intitled his Cafe, 119

der general Wolfe, against Quebec, iii. 181. His operations at the attack of the intrenchment at the river Montmorenci, 191. He is detached up that river, 181. Forms a plan for landing the troops near the heights of Abraham, 184. And assists in executing it, 185. Conducts the left wing at the battle of Quebec, 188. Where he acts bravely, 190. He receives the thanks of the house of commons, 198. Appointed commander at Quebec, 200. His vigilance for the maintenance of that post, and the reduction of Canada, 410. His motives for giving battle to the French, 413. By whom he is worsted, 415. But obliges them to abandon the siege of Quebec with precipitation, 419. He lands at Montreal, 426. Publishes manifestoes among the Canadians, 436. Co-operates in the reduction of Montreal, 439

Murray, captain, affifts in taking Belleifle, iv. 256

Mutiny-bill, proceedings on, i. 21, 66, 139, 189, 242, 439. iv. 200

Muy, chevalier de, defeated at Warbourg, iv. 43
Mylne, Mr. his plan for the bridge at Black-friars preferred,
iii. 387

N.

NABOB. See East-Indies Nadasti, general, takes Schweidnitz, ii. 152

Nanticoques, Indians, treaty between them and the British colonies, iii. 161

National debt, scheme for reducing the interest of, i. 60.

Some articles of, consolidated, 124. Remarks on it, iii.
302, 442. See Heatbrote

Naturalization of foreign Protestants, proceedings on the bill for, i. 98. And on that of the Jews, 142, 184

Navigation, remarks on the freedom of, ii. 393, 396. It is much hurt by the duty on falt, iii. 25

Navy, plan for manning, i. 32. ii. 219. iii. 51

Negotiation for peace between England and France, iv.

Negroes make an insurection in Jamaica, iv. 5 Nesbit, major, assists in taking Palais, iv. 259

Neutral islands, motion concerning, i. 33. Part of them taken possession of by the French, 42. And evacuated,

Newcastle (Pelham) duke of, elected chancellor of the university of Cambridge, i. 36. Presents a bill for a regency in case of a minor king, 96. Proposes the repeal of the act for the naturalization of the Jews, 184. Resigns the seals, and is appointed first lord of the treasury, 192. A commissioner at that board, ii. 7. Continued at the head of the treasury, iv. 222

- man of war loft, iv. 110

Newdigate, Sir Roger, his motion touching the repeal of the Jews bill, i. 187

New-England, a general description of, i. 213, 214 New-Hampshire described, i. 214

New-

New-Jersey described, i. 218. Its governor and deputies affist at a grand treaty with the Indians, iii. 161

Newton, major, left commander at Goree, ii. 296

New-York described, i. 216. Divisions in it, 229

Niagara fort built, i. 177. Plan for the reduction of it, iii. 170. With remarks, 171. It is furrendered to Sir William Johnson, 178

Nichols, major, wounded, i. 267

Nieuport, communication between it and England interrupted, ii. 129. It receives a French garrison, 131

Nightingale, captain, an exploit by, iv. 234

Norbury, captain, his bravery, iv. 9

Northumberland, riots in, iv. 217

Nottinghamsbire, riots in, ii. 33

Nova Scotia, scheme for a settlement in, i. 38. Disputes about its limits, 84. Conferences relating to it broke up, 164. Description of it, 165, 213. Short view of the dispute concerning its limits, 166. Persidious practices of the French there, 179. From whence they are expelled, 252. Assembly there constituted, ii. 44. See Supplies

N-1, Mr. hischaracter, i. 9

Nugent, Mr. appointed a commissioner of the treasury, ii. 7

O.

OBERG, general, defeated by the prince of Soubife at Landwernhagen, ii. 335

Obrien, captain, his bravery and success, iv. 10. Ocean, French man of war, destroyed, iii. 107

Ochterlony, captain, an affecting anecdote of, iii. 192

Ogilvie, countels of, arrested, ii. 65

Obio company, the rife and conduct of, i. 174. The British interest established on the banks of that river, iii.

O Kennedy, colone!, furrenders Carangoly, iii. 218

Olmutz invested by the king of Prussia, iii. 339. Some account of it, 340. The siege of it raised, 341

Oneides, Indians, conclude a treaty with the English settlements, iii. 161

Onondago river, two forts begun on, i. 274. Taken by the French, 358

Onondagoes, Indians, make a treaty with the British colonies,

Onflowe,

Onflow, Arthur, chosen speaker of the house of commons, is 194. Honours conferred upon him, iv. 210. His farewell speech to the commons, 211

Ontario lake described, i. 271.

fort taken by the French, i. 358

Orange, William-Henry, prince of, his death and character, i. 100. Marriage of his daughter, iv. 27

-, William, prince of, witnesses an engagement between a British and French frigate on the coast of Holland, iv.

-, princess of, endeavours to adjust the differences between England and Holland, ii. 270, 401. Her death and character, iii. 75

Oriflamme French man of war destroyed, ii. 242

another of that name taken, iv. 237

Orleans, Lewis Philip, duke of, serves in Germany under M. D'Etreés, ii. 102

Orphée French man of war taken, ii. 242

Offorn, Sir Danvers, animofity in New-York concerning his instructions, i. 220

Osborne, admiral, fails for the Mediterranean, ii. 30. His fuccess, 241. He receives the thanks of the house of commons, iii. 70

---, captain, killed at Belleisle, iv. 254

Oftend, communication between it and England broke off, ii. 129. It receives a French garrison, 131

Oswald, Mr. urges the necessity of a militia in Scotland, iii. 316

O/wego described, i. 270. Neglect in not fortifying it, 272. Reduced and demolished by the French, 360, 361. In possession of the English, ii. 201

Ottoman Porte, a man of war belonging to, taken iv. 23. Alliance between it and Prussia, 282. Pacified with respect to Malta. 200

Ourry, captain, deftroys a French privateer, iv. 14

Oxford-university, severities exercised upon some of its students, i. 34. Its address rejected, 35. Installation at, iii. Q5

world the file was to place the Distillant

Oxfordshire election, proceedings on, i. 236

PALAIS, the fiege and furrender of, iv. 256

Palatine, Charles Theodore, elector, opposes the scheme for electing the archduke king of the Romans, i. 84. But engages his vote for electing him on certain conditions, 115, 133, 134. Many of his troops desert from the army of the Empire, ii. 122

Pallifer, captain, takes possession of Quebec, iii. 195

Papifis of Ireland, their loyalty, iii. 123

Parker, lord (Macclesfield's son) seconds the motion for the repeal of the Jews act, i. 187. Proceedings relating to his election for Oxfordshire, 236

---, colonel John, defeated near Ticonderoga, ii. 38 ----, captain, his fuccess, ii. 234. iii. 98, 101, 102

Parliamentary proceedings, i. 12, 57, 87, 117, 135, 183, 193, 234, 287, 302, 411. ii. 184, 423. iii. 1, 282. iv. 146, 174, 337, 356

Parliaments, act concerning the election of members of, ii.

217. Endeavours used to contract their duration, 228. New act for ascertaining the qualification of members of, iii. 332

Parma, Philip, duke of, joins in a defensive league with the Emperor, king of Sardinia, &c. i. 129. Remarks on an article of the peace at Aix-la-Chapelle concerning the set-tlement of the dominions of, iii. 274

Paterson, captain, assists in reducing Belleisle, iv. 256

Patten, captain, reinforces Ofwego, i. 356

Pawnbrokers, an act for the licensing of, i. 121. Bill brought in for the restriction of, 124. Act passed for that purpose, 442. See Plate

Payton, captain, his narrow escape, ii. 245

Peace, negotiation for, between England and France, iv.

201

Pelbam, Henry, his character, i. 10. His defence of the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, 58. His speeches on the reduction of the interest of the national debt, 61, 63. Remarks on his parliamentary proceedings, 74. He supports the general naturalization-bill, 98. Opposes an amendment in the bill for repealing the Jews 28, 187.

And

And a motion for repealing a former act in favour of that people, 189. His death, 192

Pembroke (Herbert) earl of, his motions at Kirch-Denckern, iv. 274

Penfions and places, bills passed concerning, ii. 194. iii.

Pennsylvania, described, i. 219. Disagreement between its governor and assembly, 261. Its governor and deputies assist at a treaty with divers Indian nations, iii. 161

Pepperel, Sir William, appointed to the command of a regiment, i. 230

Persons eminent for learning, &c. iv. 120

Perth Amboy described, i. 219

Pestilential fever from the contagion at the sessions of the Old-Baily, i. 80

Peyton, enfign, an affecting anecdote of, iii. 192

Pheafant, French frigate, taken, iv. 237

Philadelphia described, i. 219

Phillips, Sir John, his motion concerning voting for members of parliament, ii. 217

----, captain, contributes to the victory at Minden, iii.

Pigot, governor, his prudent conduct at Madras, iii. 202
P.racies committed by the English privateers, ii. 266. Law concerning the trial of, iii. 29

Pirates made examples of, iii. 77

Pitt, John, his report concerning the American iron, i.

451 -, William, one of Mr. Pelham's partisans, i. 11. Opposes the sea-officers being heard by counsel, 20. Part of his speech on the mutiny-bill, 22. In vindication of the ministry, ot. He opposes the reduction of the number of troops, 93. Supports the general naturalization bill, Appofes an amendment in the bill for repealing the lews-act, 187. And a motion for repealing a former act in their favour, 189. His motion in favour of the Chelsea pensioners, 236. He opposes a clause in favour of Hanover, 290. Is dismissed from his office of paymaster, ib. Appointed secetary of state, and brings a mesfage in favour of German mercenaries, 424. And one concerning admiral Byng, 475. He and his friends are placed in the administration, ii. 1. Commanded to refign, 5. Receives honourable testimonies from the people of their approbation of his conduct, 6. He is restored to his office, 7. His letter to the governors in North America, relating to the slag of truce trade, iv. 4. The duke de Choiseul's letter to him, with his answer, 292, 293. His letter to M. Bussy concerning the Spanish memorial, 302. Note from the Spanish minister to him, 304. He resigns the seals, 324. Is gratisted with a pension, and his lady created a peeres, 327. Various sentiments on that occasion. ib. Letter said to be wrote by him, with the answer, 330. He is idolized by the citizens of London, 331

Pittsburg, fort Du Quesne so denominated, ii. 293. Improvements made there by general Stanwix, iii. 410

Plate, dealers in, taxes upon, ii. 195. iii. 10, 44

Potock, admiral, assists in the reduction of Chandenagore, ii. 49. Succeeds to the chief command of the sleet, 300. Worsts M. D'Apché, 301. Tries three of his captains, 302. Deseats M. D'Apché a second time, 303. Who leaves him the sovereignity of the Indian seas, 304. He worsts him a third time, and maintains the sovereignity of the Indian ocean, iii. 208

Poets, eminent, an account of, iv. 123

Poland, factions in, concerning the Russians, il. 71. And proceedings in the dyet of, concerning them and the election of a duke of Courland, 375. Invaded by the Pruffians, iii. 242, 247. Result of its diet, iv. 96. See Augustus III.

Pondicherry, French East India settlement, its reduction, iv.

103

French Indiaman, taken, ii. 31

Poor, resolutions concerning, iii. 59. Remarks on those refolutions, 61. See Servants

Pope Benedict XIV. his death and character, ii. 383

Clement XIII. elected, ii. 383 His character, 384.

Difference between him and the king of Portugal, iv.

Pork allowed to be imported into England from Ireland, ii. 215. iv. 200

Porter, captain, wounded in his engagement with the Floriffant, iii. 103

Portsmouth, conflagration at, iii. 388
Portugal. See John and Joseph Post-fines, act concerning, iii. 32
No. 40.

Potter!

Potter, Mr. introduces the register-bill, i. 150

Poulet, earl, his motion against the king's going to Hanover,
i. 246

Prague invested by the king of Prussia, ii. 80. The siege of it raised, 90

Prames described, iv. 251

Prideaux, general, killed at Niagara, iii. 177
Prince Edward French frigate destroyed, iv. 9

George man of war burnt at fea, ii. 244

Privateers, English, piracies committed by, ii. 266. Regulations with respect to them, iii. 26

Prize-money, act concerning, iii. 345

Proby, captain, his bravery and fuccess, iv. 238

Protector firefhip loft, iv. 1101 .00qb and all avalant

Protestant religion, remarks on the prefervation of it being made a pretext for the continental war, ii. 186, 197, 390. iv. 158

Prussia. See Frederic III. Henry, Ferdinand Public houses, laws for the regulation of, i. 121, 141, 421, ciult of its dieta.

442, 443

.

Puffendorf, a letter of his on the freedom of navigation, ii.

Punistments, reflections on, i. 125. iii. 383
Purcell, major, killed at Belleisle, iv. 254

er, Franch Baft lad Piettlemont, its reduction, iv.

QUAKERS, their address to George III. on his accession,

Quarantine act, an account of, i. 138

Quebec, the fiege of it planned, iii. 170. Remarks on that feheme, 171. Introduction to the expedition against it, 180. Articles of its surrender, 193. Precautions taken for its defence by general Murray, 410. It is besieged by the French, 417. Who are obliged to retire with precipitation, 419

Queenborongh man of war loft, iv. 110

Queensbury (Douglas) duke of, constituted keeper of the seal in Scotland, iv. 224

Perugal, Sec. John and Johk's Libbones, all contenting, His 32 Mater. admiral, box bards Harre de Grant. III. con. De.

Raifonable French man of war taken, ii. 244. Lost, iv.

Ramillies man of war wrecked, iii. 397

Ramsey, M. his surrender of Quebec, iii. 193

Randan, duke de, his generous and humane conduct in Hanover, ii. 322

Ratiston, arret of the Evangelical body at, in favour of Brandenburgh, Hanover, &c. with the emperor's answer to it, iii. 263. Complaints exhibited in the diet at, iv.

Redoutable French man of war burnt, iii. 108

Register-bill, proceedings on, i. 150

Registers, public, bill for keeping, ii. 220

Reid, general, conducts an Austrian corps at Torgau, iv.

Resolution man of war loft, iii. 118

Revel, a fire at, iii. 243

Rhode-island described, i. 215

Richelieu, the duke de, account of his siege and reduction of St. Philip's castle, i. 325. He superfedes the marechal D'Etreés in Germany, ii. 108. Penetrates into the Prussian dominions with the army, 114. Which commits great disorders, ib. Levies contributions in Halberstadt, 143. Favours Soubise's retreat, 151. He expostulates with prince Ferdinand on the re-assembling the Hanoverians, 176. His proceedings at Zell, 178. He fixes his head quarters at Hanover, 179. He is superseded by the count de Clermont, 321

Richmond (Lenox) duke of, a munificent patron of genius, ii. 414. His behaviour at Minden approved by prince Ferdinand, iii. 234

Rider, Sir Dudley, appointed lord chief justice of the king's bench, i. 193

Riots, in different parts of England, i. 36, 56, 159, 340, 410, ii. 32, 33, 410. iv. 217

in Ireland, iii. 124

Robinson, Sir Thomas, appointed secretary, i. 192. Resigns the seals, and is made master of the wardrobe, 291. Created lord Grantham, iv. 224

L 1 2

Rochefort, account of the expedition against, ii. 8

Rodner,

Rodney, admiral, bombards Havre de Grace, iii. 104. Destroys some vessels on the coast of France, iv. 13. Sails with an armament against Martinique, 336. In the reduction of which he affists, 364

Rollo, lord, takes possession of the island of St. John, ii. 285. Difarms the Canadians, iii. 438. Reduces the island of Dominique, iv. 249. And assists in taking Martinique, 364

Roman Catholics of Ireland, their loyalty, iii. 123

Romans, proceedings for electing the archduke Joseph king of, i. 82, 111, 133

Rouillé, M. his letter to Mr. Fox, i. 304

Rous, captain, his proceedings in America, i. 252, 254

Rowley, captain, destroys the Orislamme, ii. 242

Rufane, general, ashists in taking Martinique, iv. 364

Rum. See Spiritous liquors, and Sugar colonies

Russel, colonel, commands a body of Dutch troops against the English Fast India company, iii. 210

Ruffians, ordered to affift the queen of Hungary, ii. 62. Their progress stopt, 63. They block up the Prussian ports in the Baltick, 117. Quicken their motions, 118. Take Memel, 119. Advance against Prussia, Skirmish with the Prussians, 135. Attacked by marechal Lehwald, 136. Make a hafty retreat from the Prussian territories, 137. Which they re-enter, 344. feated at Zorndorf, 347. Their barbarities in the Pruffian dominions, 349. Miscarry in their attempt upon Colberg, 367. Defeat the Pruffians at Zullichau, iii. 247. And Cunersdorf, 251. Part of them detached into Pomerania, iv. 59. Which they evacuate, 62. They begin their march towards Silesia, ib. Their motions, 66, 69, 70, 72, 73. A detachment of them make an irruption into Brandenburg, 77. And possess themselves of Berlin, 78. Relation of their enormities there, 79. With the answer thereto, 89. Invest Colberg by sea and land, 91, 283. Detachments of them penetrate into Silesia, Pomerania, and New Marche, 284. Their grand army effects a junction with the Austrians, but the greatest part of it soon afterwards retreats towards Poland, where three of their magazines are burnt, 285. They reduce Colberg, 280

Rutland (Manners) duke of, administers the oath to commons, iv. 146. Appointed master of the horse, 223

Rutowski, veldt marechal count, the king of Poland's letter to him concerning the Saxon army, i. 393

S.

SACKVILLE, lord George, appointed to enquire into the miscarriage of the expedition against Rochesort, ii. 20. Attends the duke of Marlborough in the attempt upon St. Malo, 246. And goes with him to Germany, 251. Animosity between him and prince Ferdinand, iii. 229. His situation at Minden, 233, 360. Popular clamour against him, 354. His address to the public, 356. He demands a court-martial, 359. Substance of the charge against him, 361. Particulars of his defence, 363. Remarks on his defence, 366. Sentence of the court-martial, 371

Sail-cloth, acts concerning, i. 67. ii. 195, 208. iii. 332
Salt, proposal for making, in America, ii. 228. The duty on it very prejudicial to commerce, iii. 25

Sandys, lord, his remarks on the bill for the herring fishery, i.

Santos, isles of, submit to general Barrington, iii. 158

Sardinia. See Charles

Saumarez, captain, his success, ii. 181, 183, 266

Saunders, admiral, supersedes admiral West, i. 322. Sails to Cape Breton, iii. 180. Steers up the river St. Laurence, 182. His fleet endangered by a storm and the enemy's fire-ships, 187. His operations in reducing Quebec, 189, 191, 180, 191. Thanks of the house of commons voted to him, 198. He returns to England, 200. Success of his squadron in the Mediterranean, iv. 237

Saxe-Gotha, Frederick III. duke of, furnishes troops for the defence of Hanover, ii. 93. His capital taken by the Imperialists and French, 141. Contributions raised at, by the Pruffians, iii. 243

- Hildburghausen, prince of, assembles the army of the empire, ii. 132. Joins the prince of Soubise, 140. Defeated at Rosbach, 147

Saxony. See Augustus Scalping described, iii. 184

Scarsdale, Sir Nathaniel Curzon created lord, iv. 224

Schmettau, count, the Pruffian general, burns the suburbs of Dresden, ii. 361

Schomberg, captain, his operations in the river St. Laurence, iii. 418

Schuyler, colonel, flowness of his regiment, i. 273

Schweidnitz taken by the Austrians, ii. 152. Invested by the Prussians.

Prussians, 160. And reduced, 338. Surprised by the Austrians, iv. 286

Schwerin city bombarded and pillaged by the Prussians, iii.

ii. 73. Killed near Prague, 78

Scat, colonel, affifts in the reduction of Martinique, iv. 365
Scotch brigade in the Dutch service, an act concerning, i. 300
Scotland, laws relating to the forfeited estates in, i. 121, 123.
ii. 208. Whence the augmentation of the judges-salaries there to be paid, iii. 13. Clause in the act concerning the Turkey company injurious to its trade, 41. Alarm in, of a French descent, 126, 391, 392. Attempt to establish a militia there, 314. New acts concerning treason, and the forseited estates there, 349, iv. 193

Scroop, captain, assists in the defence of St. Philip's fort, i. 316, 327

Sea-officers, fund established for the relief of their widows, i.94 Seamen, progress of a bill relating to them, i. 19. Bill for keeping a certain number of, registered in pay, 32. Bill brought in for the better payment of their wages, 455.
Passed, ii. 204. Scheme for registering them, 219. Bill concerning their prize and bounty money, iii. 345. Those of the British navy superior to foreign, iv. 237, 238.
Their dexterity at land, 368

Senecas, Indians, treaty between the British colonies and them, iii. 161

Senegal, expedition to, ii. 270

Servants, clause relating to the settlement of, ii. 216

Shebbeare, Dr. his trial, ii. 408

Sheriffs, reflections on their power in parliamentary returns, i. 240

Sherlock, Dr. Thomas, bishop of London, his letter to George III. iv. 147

Shipwrecks, an act concerning, i. 139

Shirley, governor, appointed to the command of a regiment, i. 230. His fon killed, 260. He succeeds to the command of the army in North America, 261. Gets the command of an expedition against Niagara, 263, 270. Arrives at Oswego, 273. Where he orders two forts to be begun, 274. And returns to Albany, 275. Is succeeded by general Abercrombie, 342

Shropshire, riots in, i. 410

Shuldam, captain, affifts in taking Guadaloupe, iii. 138

Sicily.

Sicily. See Charler and Ferdinand
Silefia loan, differences concerning adjusted, i. 302
Silk, acts concerning, i. 74, 453. ii. 206. iii. 11, 41
Silver-coin, order concerning, with remarks, iii. 68

Sirenne, French frigate, taken, iv. 9

Six-Nations, conference with them at Albany, i. 227. They refuse to join general Shirley, 273. Conclude an alliance with the British colonies, iii. 161. Act under the British banner, 170, 178, 180. New treaty with them and other tribes, iv. 247

Skinner, captain, his bravery and death, iii. 396

Sloane, Sir Hans, his museum purchased by parliament, i.

Smith, captain, sent to destroy two ships off Toulon, iii. 105. Like to fall into a mistake at Quebec, 186

Smugglers, an act concerning, i. 454. Complaints against, in America, iv. 4

Snow, dreadful havock by the melting of, ii. 58

Society for the encouragement of arts, manufactures, and commerce, inflitted, ii. 412

Soldiers, bill for limiting their time of fervice, i. 24. Those in America and Germany furnished with jackets, blankets, &c. by private contributions, iii. 199. See Mutiny

Soleil royal, French man of war, deftroyed, iii. 118
Soleikoff, count, defeats the Prussians at Zullichau, iii. 247.

And Cunersdorf, 251. Paffes the Vistula, iv. 62

Somerset, captain, wounded, iii. 209
Soubise, the prince of, sent with a French army into Germany, ii. 59. He takes possession of several places belonging to the king of Prussia for the use of the queen of Hungary, 68. Joins the army of the empire, 140. Is defeated at Rosbach, 147. Retreats to Halberstadt, 151. Assembles a body of troops at Hanau, 325. Penetrates into Hesse Cassel, where his van is deseated by the militia, 329. Detaches a party under the duke of Broglio, who deseats the prince of Ysenbourg, 330. He takes possession of Gottingen, 335. Worsts general Oberg at Landwernhagen, ib: Takes possession of Francfort, iii. 224. Commands an army on the Lower Rhine, iv. 270. Dislodges the marquis of Granby's advanced posts, 272. Is deseated at Kirch-Denckern, ib. Animosity between him and Broglio, 275. Retreats to the Loer, ib. Which he repasses, and advances to Dulmen, ib. Lays Embden and Osnabrug under contribution, 277. Cantons his troops at Dusseldorp, and along the Lower Rhine, 280

South-Sea company obtains certain satisfaction on account of the Assente, i. 85

Spain. See Ferdinand and Charles

Spanish-town, in Jamaica, contentions between and Kingston, i. 465

Spencer, hon. John, created viscount Spencer, iv. 223

Spirituous liquors, bills concerning, iii. 298, 300, 305, 343, 345. iv. 349. See Difillation

Sporcken, general, his success on the Unstrut, iv. 269. His Defeat on the Dymel, 271

Spotsaucod, Mr. projects the Ohio company, i. 174 Spry, captain, his success, i. 362

St. Anne French man of war, taken, iv. 248

St. Croix, chevalier de, his defence and surrender of Belleisle, iv. 253

St. Germain, the count de, sent under M. D'Etreés into Germany, ii. 59. And with a detachments to Crevelt, 326. Where he is deseated, 327. He is repulsed by the duke of Holstein near Ersdorf, iv. 33. Skirmishes between his corps and the allies, 39. He resigns his commission in disgust, 42

St. John, island of, taken, ii. 28;

St. Malo, expedition against, ii. 246, 255

Stainville, M. de, worsts major Bulow at Munden, iv. 50. at Schaken, 56. And raises contributions in Halberstadt, ib. Takes and abandons Duderstadt, 267

Stamps, additional duties on, i. 420. iii. 11, 298

Stanislaus, king, letter to him from the king of Prussia on his offering the city of Nancy for a place of congress, iv. 30 Stanley, Mr. his negotiation in France for peace, iv. 294.

He returns to London, 320

Stanwix, general, erects a fort at the pass of Oneida, ii. 288. Commands a detachment in the neighbourhood of lake Ontario, iii. 171. Establishes the British interest on the Ohio, 410

Statute-merchant, and statute-staple, an account of, iii. 56 Steel, captain, assists in taking Guadaloupe, iii. 149

Stephens, Alexander, his great age, iii. 96

Stevens, admiral, fails for the East Indies, ii. 30. Joins admiral Pocock, 301. Is wounded, 303. Affists in the reduction of Pondicherry, iv. 103, 109. Part of his squadron wrecked, 109. His remonstrance to the Danish and Dutch settlements, 110

Stile altered, i. 108

Stirn, Mr. affassination by, iii. 384

Stormont (Murray) viscount of, visits the king of Prussia at Dresden, i. 387

Storr, captain, loses the calf of one leg in an engagement with a French ship, ii. 242

Strange, lord (Derby's fon) his character, i. 25. He opposes the extension of the military law to the East India company's settlements, 189

Stuart, general, embarks with admiral Byng for Minorca, i.

, captain, his narrow escape from being massacred, iii.

____, lieutenant, his fuccess and bravery, iv. 10

Suckling, captain, his bravery, ii. 234

Sugar-colonies, deliberations concerning, i. 149. Acts for the encouraging the trade of, ii. 195, 208. iii. 309, 345. iv. 205

Sulkowski, prince, made prisoner by a Prussian corps, iii. 243 Sumatra, settlements in, reduced by the French, iv. 246 Sunderland man of war lost, iv. 110

Superbe, French man of war, foundered, iii. 117

Supplies granted by parliament, i. 16, 59, 60, 93, 94, 120, 137, 183, 235, 292, 294, 295, 415, 426. ii. 187. iii, 1, 287. iv. 187

Surat, in the East-Indies, described, i. 199. Reduced by captain R. Maitland, iii. 205

Swanton, commodore, his proceedings in the river St. Laurence, iii. 418. He steers to reduce Grenade, iv. 370

Swedes, their operations, ii. 144, 161, 162, 163, 164, 372, 373. iii. 242, 243. iv. 58, 91, 96, 283, 284. See Frederick and Adolphus

T.

TALBOT, earl, appointed lord steward, iv. 223.

Tallow, Irish, allowed to be imported into England, iii.

37 Tappanopoli reduced by the French, iv. 246

Tavora, the marquis and marchioness of, &c. put to death for a conspiracy against the king of Portugal, ii. 386. iii.

Taylor, captain, his bravery and success, iv. 10
Teesdale, colonel, assists in taking Palais, iv. 259
No. 40.
M m

Teme-

Temeraire, French men of war, taken, iii. 108

Temple (Greenville) earl, opposes the repeal of the Jews act, i. 186. And a clause in the Address, 289. Appointed lord privy seal, ii. 7. iv. 222. Resigns, 327

Terpsichore, French frigate, taken, iii. 390, 394

Theodore, king of Corsica, ungenerously treated in England, i. 127

Thefee, a French man of war, foundered, iii. 117

Thiery, Joseph, his information concerning Rochefort, &c. ii. 22

Thomond (Wyndham-Obrien) earl of, appointed treasurer of the houshould, ii. 8

Thornton, Mr. his motion concerning the militia, i. 126. He oposes the register bill, 151

Thurst, M. an account of, iii. III. Sails from Dunkirk, 119. Alarms the Scottish coasts, and sails to Gottenburg, 126. And Bergen, 390. Lands in Scotland, 391. Makes a descent at Carricksergus, 392. He is slain, and his squadron taken, 394

Ticonderoga, unsuccessful attempt against, ii. 286. New expedition planned against it, iii. 170. With animadversions, 171. It is abandoned by French, and taken posses.

fion of by general Amherst, 174

Tilbury man of war loft, ii. 45
Tillecherry, in the East Indies, described, i. 201

Titcomb, colonel, killed, i. 267

Tobago, island, taken possession of by the French, i. 42. Who are obliged to evacuate it, 43

Torgan taken by the Imperialists, iii. 256

Tottleben, general his operations, iv. 59, 62, 77, 78, 284

Townshend, honourable Charles, appointed a lord of the admiralty, i 193. Presents a militia-bill, 203. Promotes another, 436. Prepares a bill concerning the punishment of governors of plantations, 456. His report concerning Milford-haven, 468. Constituted secretary at war, iv. 222 ny-bill, i. 66. He moves for a militia-bill, 434. His patriotism, iii. 181. He destroys a French battery at the river Montmorenci, 190. His motions at the attack of the intrenchment at Montmorenci, 191. Forms a plan for landing the troops near the heights of Abraham, 184. And assists in the execution of it, 187. His station at the battle of Quebec, 188. And gallant behaviour, further operations in compleating the victory, ib. 191, 192, 193. He is thanked by the house of commons, 198. Returns to England, 200

Trapaud, brigadier, accompanies general Hopson to the West Indies, iii. 130

Trelawney, captain, assists in taking Guadaloupe, iii. 137,

Trentham, lord, account of his election for Westminster, i. 75, 101

Trollop, major, blown up at Guadaloupe, iii. 145

Troy, captain, his bravery, ii. 299

Turkey trade laid open, i. 140. French cloths prohibited to be imported within its limits, iii. 39

Turner, Sir Edward, proceedings relating to his election for Oxforshire, i. 236

Turnpikes, riots on account of, i. 56

Tuscaroras, Indians, treaty between the British colonies and them, iii. 161

Tuteloes, their treaty with the British colonies, iii. 161 Tweeddale (Hay) marquis of, appointed justice general of Scotland, iv. 224

Twightwees, Indians, some account of, i. 174. They decline a treaty with the British colonies, iii. 161

Tyravoley, lord, supersedes general Fowke in the command at Gibraltar, i. 323

Tyrrel, captain, his proceedings at Tobago, i. 42. Gallant exploit of, ii. 298

U.

UNAMIES, their treaty with the British colonies, iii.

Uvedale, captain, affists in taking Guadaloupe, iii. 149. And in defeating a French fleet, iv. 9

V.

VADREUIL, marquis de, his letter to the Canadian officers, iii. 420. His furrender of Montreal, 425

M m 2

Valeur,

Valeur, French frigate, taken, iv. 9

Vandeput, Sir George, account of his competition for Westminster, i. 75, 101

Vanssittari, Mr. his successful management in the East Indies, iv. 246

Ventilators set up on prisons, i. 80

Virgin floop retaken from the French, iv. 11

Virginia described, i. 221. Disputes between the governor and people, 229

Visigapatam, in the East Indies, described, i. 203. Taken by the French, ii. 53

Voluntiers, bounties given to, iil. 174

W

WADDINGTON, Mr. Robert, fent to observe the transit of Venus, iv. 16

Waldegrave, general John, appointed to inquire into the micerriage against Rochefort, ii. 20. His bravery at Minden, iii. 234, 235. And at Warbourg, iv. 45

Walker, captain, appointed engineer in the expedition against Senegal, ii. 273

-, commodore George, his case, iii. 54

Wall, don Ricardo, some account of his transactions in England, i. 86. His ministry in Spain, 232. He favours the British interest, 276. His reply to the earl of Bristol, iv. 351

Walsh, general, affists in taking Martinique, iv. 364 Wampum of the American Indians described, iii. 162

Waspingers, their treaty with the British colonies, iii. 161

War in general, reflections on, ii. 261

Warwick, captain, affifts colonel Clive in beating the Nabob, ii. 47

man of war retaken, iv. 235

Warwicksbire, riots in, i. 410

Washington, colonel, his transactions in America, i. 177,

Watson, admiral, sent to the East Indies, i. 370. His proceedings there, 371, 373, 374. ii. 4, 46, 49, 53

-, colonel, complimented by prince Ferdinand for his behaviour at Minden, iii. 234

Watts, Mr. concerts the plan for deposing the Nabob of Bengal, ii. 51

Weavers, laws relating to their wages, i. 443

Webb,

Webb, general, his operations in America, i. 358. ii. 40
Weights and measures, inquiries about, ii. 229. iii. 64, 348 Wenman, lord, proceedings concerning his election for Oxfordshire, i. 236

Wefel, a large magazine of hay burnt at, belonging to the French, iv. 271

West, admiral, his character, i. 315. His behaviour in the action with M. de la Gallissoniere, 319. Superseded, 322. But is graciously received, 325. Appointed a lord of the admiralty. ii. 8. Sent with a squadron to the Westward, 30

West-Indies, and the Leeward islands, transactions in, i. 42. ii. 234, 238, 298. iii. 102, 132. iv. 4, 14, 248, 336, 364.

See Barrington, Moore

Westminster, account of a remarkable election at, i. 75, 101.

Bill for widening some of its streets, 417. Its bridge described, ib. Bills for supplying it with fish, ii. 220.

iii. 326

Westmoreland (Fane) earl of, installed chancellor of the uni-

Whale-fishery, act for encouraging, i. 30

Wheeler, captain, killed, iv. 237

Wheels of heavy carriages, an act for regulating, i. 141. Miscarriage of a bill relating to, iii. 52

Whitmore, general, assists in the reduction of Louisbourg, ii. 281, 284

Williams, Sir C. Hanbury, the Czarina's answer to him, ii. 72

———, Sir William Peere, killed at Belleisle, iv. 257

Wilson, captain, insulted by the Dutch, iii. 211. For which he takes vengeance, 212

-, captain, complimented by prince Ferdinand for his behaviour at Minden, iii. 234

Winchelsea (Finch) earl of, his remarks on the bill for the herring fishery, i. 71

Windows, additional taxes on, ii. 194. iv. 348
Winterfield, general, killed at Goerlitz, ii. 142

Wirtemberg, Charles Eugene, duke of, his operations, ii. 59,

123. iii. 240. iv. 39

0.

is

of

6,

Wolfe, general, his bravery at Louisbourg, ii. 281, 282. Vested with the command against Quebec, iii. 181. His manifesto on the isle of Orleans, 182. Takes possession of point Levi, 185. Encamps by the falls of the river Montmorenci, 187. Sails up the river St. Laurence, 189.

He

He is repulsed at Montmorenci, 190. Remarks on his fituation, 182. He calls a council of war, ib. Lands at the heights of Abraham, 189. Falls at the battle of Quebec, 189. Eulogum on him, 192, 196. A monument to his memory addressed for by the house of commons, 198

Wolfenbuttle. See Brunswick

Wool and woollen yarn allowed to be imported into England from Ireland, i. 124, 141

Worge, colonel, commands the forces sent against Goree, ii. 295. Left governor of Senegal, 297

Wright, Fortunatus, his gallantry and death, i. 337

Wunch, general, retakes Leipzig, and worsts general Haddick at Corbitz, iii. 256

X.

XAVERIUS, prince of Saxony, sent with a reinforcement to the prince of Soubise, ii. 335. He penetrates into the Hessian and Hanoverian territories, iv. 46. Takes Wolfenbuttle, and forms the siege of Brunswick, but is forced to abandon both, 277

Y. mitalon lind a ho againers

YORK, city, riot at, ii. 33

Howe, ii. 252. Titles conferred on him, iv. 16. He is admitted to the council-board, 147: Receives the queen at her arrival at St. James's, 230

Yorke, general, his negociations in Holland, i. 308. ii. 165, 268, 392, 400. iii. 269. iv. 25

, Mr. supports the bill for extending the mutiny-act to the East India company's settlements, i. 190 Yorksbire, riots in, i. 159. ii. 33

Ysenbourg, prince of, defeated by marechal Broglio at Sangarhausen, ii. 330. Killed at Bergen, iii. 226

Z.

ZELL, proceedings of the duke de Richelieu there, ii.

178. See Hanover

Zittau destroyed by the Austrians, ii. 125

DIRECTIONS to the BOOK-BINDER for Placing the COPPER-PLATES.

Vol. I.

DR. Smollet, fronting the Title Lord Hallifax, 39
Augusta, princess dowager of Wales,	39 95
Louisa, late queen of Denmark,	109
Yorke, earl of Hardwicke,	146
General Lawrence,	180
Lionel Sackville, duke of Dorfet,	195
General map of the East Indies,	199
Map of North America,	213
Charles Fitzroy, duke of Grafton,	247
Right hon. Henry Fox, fecretary of state,	290
The hon. Charles Townshend,	303
Lord Blakeney,	325
Lord Loudon,	357
Captain Coram,	416
Admiral Byng,	477

Vol. II.

T ORD Henley	7
Charles, duke of Marlborough,	19
Hon. John Lockhart, late commander of his majesty's ship Tartar,	31
Colonel Coote,	47
Map of the feat of war in Germany,	112
Brigadier General Monckton,	181
The right hon. George Grenville,	204
Captain Arthur Forrest,	234
Map of France,	246
Edward, duke of York,	252
	nomas

Directions for placing the Cuts. Thomas Cumming, 271 Richard Tyrrel, Esq; late captain of the Buckingham. 298 Marshal Keith, 357 Hugh, earl of Northumberland, 412 VOL. III. AP of the West-Indies. 102 Map of the Caribbee islands, 127 General Amherst, 176 Admiral Saunders, (Sheet M) 180 General Wolfe, (Sheet N) 182 General Townshend, 194 Admiral Pocock. 208 Prince Ferdinand, 230 General Kingsley, 334 Lord George Sackville, 367 VOL. IV. TARQUIS of Granby, 44 Lord Downe, 54 Queen Carolina, 130 George III. 145 Dr. Thomas Sherlock, late lord bishop of London, 147 Lord chief justice Willes, 208 Duke of Devonshire, 223 Sir Piercy Brett, Knt.

Queen Charlotte,

Commodore Keppel,

225

2,0

254

